The insurgents are quite active in the Central Department. They have lately burned and destroyed a great deal of property about Trinidad. A few days since a large band of insurgents attacked Puerto Principe, but after a short engagement were beaten off with considerable loss.

A conscription will soon be put in force in Cuba. It is popular with all classes, and the newspapers are insisting upon it every day.

FRANCE.

The Proposed Political Reforms—Further Privileges to be Granted.

PARIS, Thursday, July 29.

The Pays has reason to believe that the political reforms, soon to be proposed to the Senate, will be more liberal than the Emperor's message to the Corps Legislatif indicated. The Pays intimates that the right of parliamentary initiative and of presenting orders of the day will be granted to the Corps Legislatif, while alterations will be made in the Senate, the sittings of which will probably become public.

A large number of military furloughs has been granted or extended, which it is estimated will be equivalent to a reduction of the army by 20,000 men.

SPAIN.

The Disturbances—The Carlists Discouraged.

PARIS, Thursday, July 29.

La Liberté reports that the Spanish Minister here has received information that the disturbances in Spain have only commenced, not ended. But the Carlists in Paris deem their cause lost.

MADRID, Thursday, July 29.

The Carlist agitators are dispirited. A plot to assassinate the Captain-General of Catalonia has been discovered and frustrated. The Carlist forces in the Province of Cuadas Real fled to the valley of Alcadia with the Government troops in swift pursuit. Several of the Carlists captured with arms in their hands have been condemned to death by a council of war; but efforts will be made to have their sentences commuted.

LIVERPOOL, Thursday, July 29.

A dispatch from Crewe, an important railroad centre, thirty-four miles from this city, in Chester County, contains the following: "A man whose name is unknown committed suicide here to-day by throwing himself under the wheels of a passing railroad train. Upon an inquest being held a number of securities, of various kinds, part of the proceeds of the Ocean National Bank robbery at New-York some time ago, were found upon the body."

The Times on the Chinese Question in America.

LONDON, Thursday, July 29.

The Times to-day has an article on the Chinese question in the United States. It thinks the conflict of races in California cannot be solved by heavy duties on immigration or by street outrages. It is impossible to suppose that the Chinese can be kept out of America. Inheriting an ancient civilization and perfect economic methods, but destitute of the strength and toughness of moral fiber which support authority, the Chinese may be welcomed as sentenists in colonization, not feared as a race likely to dominate in the future.

The Relations with Mexico—Practice of the Harvard Crew.

LONDON, Thursday, July 29—Midnight.

In the House of Commons to-night, Mr. OTWAY, Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs, in reply to an inquiry from Mr. SUMNER for information, said the present condition of the relations between England and Mexico prevented Her Majesty's Government from officially aiding the holders of Mexican bonds in the prosecution of their claims; but owing to the importance of the subject it would be glad to hear of any satisfactory arrangements for a settlement.

The Harvard crew were out on the Thames twice to-day. In the morning they rowed from Putney to Hammersmith and back, and in the afternoon they rowed to Mortlake and returned. They have now settled down to steady practice. KELSEY will not be retained as "coach." It has not been decided yet who will succeed him.

The semi-annual meeting of the Department of the Maine Grand Army of the Republic assembled with Post Sedgwick here yesterday. The attendance was not large. General GEORGE W. REAL, Grand Commander, presided. The reports of the officers represent the order in a prosperous condition throughout the State. The new and greatly improved "Ritual" of the order, recently adopted, was introduced yesterday afternoon and received with much favor. To-day the Department will make an excursion to the cottages as guests of Post Sedgwick.

Progress of the Public Surveys in Kansas—The Richness of the Lands.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 29.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has just received advices from the Surveyor-General at Lawrence, Kansas, showing the completion of the survey of twenty additional townships lying between the Saline and Solomon Forks of the Kansas River, in longitude 99° west from Greenwich, and between latitudes 39° and 40° north, embracing an aggregate area of 432,007 acres. The surface is generally level along the streams, where the soil is generally first rate and suitable for cultivation, while the uplands are more rolling, and in some places broken, with a second and third rate soil suitable for grazing purposes. A moderate supply of timber is found on the margins of the streams, consisting on the larger of cottonwood, ash, elm and hickory, while on the smaller tributaries oak, ash, elm, walnut, box elder and cottonwood are found. Limestone suitable for building purposes is found in abundance on all parts of the tract. These lands produce a fine growth of prairie grass, and, being well watered, are well adapted for grazing.

JAPAN.

Dispatches from Admiral Rowan—Proceedings in the Parliament—The War—Progress of the Japanese Toward Civilization—Recent Improvements.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, July 29.

Rear-Admiral ROWAN, commanding the Asiatic Squadron, in a dispatch dated Yokohama, June 26, says: The Japanese Parliament is yet in session, but not open to foreigners. It is reported that many important measures are under consideration, mostly relating to foreigners, foreign intercourse and finance. It is probable that the rebel forces on the Island of Yeddo have been captured or dispersed. Many of the Princes have surrendered their long-cherished feudal rights for the general good.

Already have the Japanese far outstripped the Chinese in progress toward Western civilization. The Government has troops uniformed and armed with the latest improved breech-loading guns; the naval vessels are well armed; a hospital has been built at Hiogo, and is in charge of an American surgeon and is open to foreigners. Light-houses are built and lighted, and a lighthship is being equipped to be stationed off Treaty Point. The coal mines are successfully worked, and supply our squadron with coal, while the Chinese refuse to allow foreigners to mine coal, and will not mine it themselves because of the "Sung Chui."

The Duke of EDINBURGH is expected here at the beginning of August. The English Vice-Admiral says he will be received as Captain of the Colosus. There are now in this port an iron-clad frigate, a line-of-battle ship, three gunboats and two transports of the English squadron, one frigate and two gunboats of the French, one Prussian and one Dutch corvette, the Monocacy and the Piscataqua. The health of the squadron is excellent.

Defeat of the Northern Party under Enomoto—Movements of the Mikado's Fleet—Distribution of the Vessels of the American Squadron.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 29.

Commander E. P. WILLIAMS, commanding the United States steamer Oneida, reports to the Navy Department that on the morning of the 20th of June the Mikado's fleet moved in and attacked the ships and fortifications of the Northern Party under ENOMOTO, and after an engagement of twenty-six hours took possession of the town and destroyed the vessels Eagle and Emperor, belonging to the Northern Party, after having one of their own vessels blown up by a shell which entered her powder magazine. The forces of ENOMOTO have possession of Kamida Fort and Fort Benter, and a line of earthworks extending across the peninsula. ENOMOTO has about 3,000 men and the Mikado 8,000. The earthworks and forts were invested, and batteries being thrown up preparatory to a regular siege of all the works held by ENOMOTO's party.

The distribution of the vessels of the Asiatic Squadron on the 1st of June was as follows: The Piscataqua left Shanghae on the 15th of May and arrived at Nagasaki on the 20th, where she remained. The Idaho, Oneida, Iroquois, Ashuelot and Monocacy were at Nagasaki, the Unadilla at Hong Kong, the Arcostook at Hakodadi, and the Monocacy at Yokohama.

The Temperance Movement—Meeting of the Executive Committee of the Alliance—Harmony Restored.

BOSTON, Mass., Thursday, July 29.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the State Temperance Alliance, the recent vote requesting Mr. W. B. STOCKTON to resign the Presidency of the Alliance was unanimously rescinded. A resolution was adopted approving of the call by the Prohibitory Committee for a State Temperance Convention, and Mr. BROOKES, Rev. Dr. MARVIN, and Rev. Mr. THAYER, were designated a Cooperative Committee.

Rev. Mr. DINGER, of the German Methodist Episcopal Church, at Boston Highlands, who was present by invitation, made an address, in which he said he was opposed to the sale of lager-beer, being satisfied that it was intoxicating and injurious to the German population. He thought that if a meeting was called of Germans who favor the present law, much good would result.

Professor WEBSTER, of Illinois, and the temperance people were watching the cause in Massachusetts with great interest. The Temperance men of Illinois, he said, had formed an independent organization, and would stand their ground; and that all over the West they were massing, and it would be a question of national policy.

WASHINGTON.

The Return of the President—The Cabinet Meeting—Business Matters in New-York—Encouraging Reports from the Indians—Personal—Miscellaneous.

(Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.)

WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 29.

President GRANT returned here this morning and spent most of the day at the White House. At 10 o'clock the ante-rooms of the Executive Mansion were pretty full, but the ushers had orders to take no cards, and no one was admitted to see the President. At noon all the Cabinet officers except Mr. CRESWELL, who has not yet recovered from his accident, were in attendance, and in a few minutes afterward the doors were closed and the much-canvassed Cabinet session took place. The meeting lasted four hours, and the important proceedings, if there were any, are kept strictly private. It is stated by more than one Cabinet officer that nothing of importance was done, and that only the routine work, which had accumulated during the President's absence, was transacted. It is further asserted that no action was taken in reference to the Southern States, and that the subject was not even alluded to. There is reason to believe, however, that State Department matters were considered, but whether they had reference to Cuba or the Alabama claims is not exactly known. Secretary FISH has a dinner party this evening and Cabinet officers generally are inaccessible.

INTERNAL REVENUE PROFITS.

Within the last week very unpleasant rumors have reached Washington relative to internal revenue matters in New-York. It is understood that Commissioner DELANO has addressed a letter to certain officials there, directing that legal proceedings be immediately instituted against the bankers and brokers who are in nearly fifteen months' arrears, and asking the reason why the law has not been enforced in their case.

THE INDIANS.

Commissioner PARKER has received for the last few days such encouraging accounts from the Indian country that he is not apprehensive in the least of any further hostilities on the Plains this Summer. The Indians are nearly all on their reservations and the new machinery is working very satisfactorily.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 29.

REVENUE REMEDIES.

Commissioner DELANO decides that where persons purchase old rails, unroll them, and then sell them to railroad companies, they are to all intents and purposes manufacturers of new rails, and as such liable to the special tax of $5 upon all such sales, in excess of $2,000 per quarter, under section 4 of the act of March 31, 1868.

The foregoing information is desired to be embodied in the forthcoming annual report of the Commissioner.

POLITICAL.

THE AUGUST ELECTIONS.

State Elections in Kentucky, Alabama and Tennessee.

Next month the series of State elections begins anew. The first will be held in Kentucky on Monday, Aug. 2; the second in Alabama on Tuesday, Aug. 3, and the third in Tennessee on Thursday, Aug. 5. In Kentucky a State Treasurer and members of both Houses of the Legislature are to be chosen. The rival candidates for the office of Treasurer are ROBERT WING, Republican, and J. W. TATE, Democrat. Mr. TATE is the present incumbent of the office, and it is to be expected that he will be reflected by a large majority. The vote for President was: GRANT, 90,666; SEYMOUR, 115,689—SEYMOUR's majority, 75,313.

In Alabama members of the Legislature and Congressmen are to be chosen. The nominations of the two parties for Congress are as follows:

Republicans.	Democrats.
1. Alfred E. Buck.	William D. Mann.
2. Charles W. Buckley.	A. S. Worthy.
3. Robert S. Heflin.	J. C. Parkinson.
4. Charles Hayes.	John B. Reed.
5. William J. Harralson.	Peter M. Dox.
6. John J. Hinds.	William C. Sherrod.

In the Fourth District the Democratic Convention failed to make a nomination, and for a time it was reported that the Democrats would support General DUSTAN, an independent Republican candidate. Dr. JOHN B. REED, of Tuscaloosa, has, however, been since brought out as an independent Democratic candidate, and we notice that the leading party papers in the State, including the Montgomery Mail and Mobile Register, insert his name in the list of regular Democratic nominations. As a result, some of the Democrats are doing nothing, some are working for General DUSTAN and some for Dr. REED. Only three of the Democratic candidates are natives of the State.

Tennessee will elect a Governor, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, and members of the Legislature. Both tickets are Republican, that headed by General STOKES being supported by the Ultra-Radicals, and the other, headed by Governor SENTER, being supported by the Conservatives and the more liberal portion of the Republican Party, among the latter, however, being included many who, like Senator BROWNLOW, have heretofore been regarded as among the most ultra of the Radicals. The two tickets for State officers are as follows:

Radical.	Liberal.
Governor.
William B. Stokes.	DeWitt C. Senter.
Superintendent of Public Instruction.
J. L. McDowell.	Albert J. Tipton.

Mr. SENTER is at present acting Governor of the State, he having assumed that office as President of the State Senate when Governor BROWNLOW was elected to the United States Senate. The vote of the State for President was: GRANT, 84,081; SEYMOUR, 29,071; GRANT's majority, 55,010.

NEW-YORK POLITICS.

The Coming Campaign—The City and the Rural Districts.

From the Albany Evening Journal, July 29.

If we were to judge from the self-complacent and dictatorial temper of the New-York Tribune, it might be considered a serious misfortune that HORACE GREELEY is not generally recognized as arbiter of the Republican Party, which would—thus regarded—consult its best interests by asking him to mould its platforms, enunciate its principles, nominate its candidates and order its movements. Really, the holding of caucuses and Conventions does seem a waste of energy, when the Tribune Sanhedrim is so ready to take upon himself all the burdens of organization.

But when Republicans, grown critical, observe the influence of the Tribune at home, and consider the aspect of New-York City politics—its especial field—they may be permitted to doubt whether the proposed plan would be entirely wise and safe, after all. For, while the "rural districts," which the Tribune seems to consider as especially prone to be affected by pernicious influences, have been year after year rolling up round Republican majorities in the Metropolis the party seems to grow steadily backward, and only improve upon its insignificant vote when the advice of the Tribune and its congeners is disregarded.

Just now, the patent plan of the Tribune for a cure of existing evils, is virtually to abandon the Republican organization in New-York City, with its party machinery and machinery—to let "a few respectable gentlemen" in each district make the nominations and carry on the campaign. But the "countryman" are so verdant as to believe it jesuitical, and even treacherous to the triumph of principles. They do not regard Republicanism a failure—at least, outside of New-York City. And they by no means feel assured that the "few respectable gentlemen" would not be manipulated by adroit wire-pullers, and lead to do many foolish and improper things as we have seen done by the Central Committee. For instance, the Tribune holds up the "respectable gentlemen" of the New-York Citizens' Association as models for emulation in "the rural districts." Can it be aware of the fact that the bill reorganizing the Board of Education, which it denounced, was advocated by the Citizens' Association; and that the Tax Levy, which it vehemently denounces—proclaiming every legislator who voted for it a corruptionist—was largely indebted for its final passage to the efforts of the manager of that Association, Mr. E. F. SMITH, who secured as his reward a place in the New-York Board of Tax Commissioners, that had been previously promised to Hon. CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW. So it seems that even "respectable gentlemen" are not above plot and intrigue when they abide in cities. Can we give assurance that it would be otherwise in the rural districts? Suppose a "respectable gentleman" should have happened to look many thousands to the wayward son of some "blessed million," and that he had his only chance of getting repaid was by "fixing" a Tax Levy to suit the interests of the millionaire aforesaid; might it not happen that the "respectable gentleman" would forget his principles in his anxiety for greenbacks? Such things have been—and they will be repeated, if poor human nature, even when it is not under the direction of conscience.

If the Tribune wants to do a real service, let it suspend for a while its anxious guardianship of "the rural districts," and devote its talents to a combination of the discordant Republican factions in the Metropolis; to a reduction of the expenses of municipal government, which can never be obtained if "the respectable gentlemen" of that emporium were half so shrewd or half so industrious as the political managers among the "countrymen." Meanwhile, the plan it urges having so far as tried resulted only in failure—in giving increased strength to the adversary—we submit it is in the worst possible taste for the Tribune to advise that Republicans shall abandon their organization in the only portions of the State where it has proved effective and capable of winning victories, and substitute for it the blundering, heavy and wooden-headed mismanagement of "respectable gentlemen" like those who have made a bread fiasco of New-York City politics.

The Tax Levies and the Tribune.

From the Troy Whig, July 29.

The Tribune lays down a rule by which we cannot consent to be guided. We are called upon to consider the New York City and County Tax Levies as the crucial test. Whoever voted for them, unless he were a Democrat, is pronounced disloyal. Three members from this county voted for them. Two are Democrats and one a Republican. Mr. AKIN, who represents our Second District, is a farmer, who has always borne a good reputation. We do not know him personally. His neighbors and acquaintances, however, speak well of him. If he proved too weak to resist temptation, and took money for his votes, then he is one more instance to be added to many others, of the danger of putting in the way of temptation men who have lived respectable lives. We do not know whether he desires a renomination, but we know we believe it would be refused to him, if he asked it, because he voted for the Tax Levies, and because he voted for the Tax Levies.

Why does the Tribune think so lightly of the power of "respectable" men to lead into temptation? is the daily prayer of a great many men, and it was enjoined by "the first true gentleman that ever lived" upon all who would pray rightly, to use those words. We have great faith in the practical efficacy of removing temptation, and of avoiding it. If the Tax Levies are the "cause of contention" in the rural districts, they would be removed by taking them out of the Legislature, and leaving them to the sagacious control of the people by whom the taxes are to be paid.

The charges against Tammany Hall of political corruption are enough to justify a repeal of the charter, whether the repeal would relieve the City of New-York from any part of its unjust burdens, or not, and whether any remedies be in the power over legislation. The flagrant dissolution of the purpose to repay by charter from the Tribune's consideration shows that the writer has a very inadequate conception of the importance of corporate powers, and their ability to give vitality and influence to a bad as well as a good society.

We know that members of the Legislature have been subsidized and pensioned upon the City of New-York; and upon some of its public departments and incorporations, by the Tammany Society, in virtue of its acknowledged claim to dispose of all the patronage of the City.

Would it be fair to account for the Tribune's tenderness for ancient Tammany on the ground that some one of its friends is seeking a sugar-teat, which Tammany has presented him to suppress his appetite and suppress his clamor?

Republican Mismanagement in the Metropolis.

From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, July 28.

We are glad to see that our Metropolitan Republican cotemporaries are beginning to appreciate the gross mismanagement of the party in that City, and to discover how ridiculous their assumption of superior wisdom and their chronic patronizing advice to the "rural districts" are. In another column we give a sharp and humorous retort which they have elicited from the Jamestown Journal. It contains much wholesome truth stated in a plain and unmistakable way, and we hope that the arrogant dunces who assume such superior wisdom, and put on such insufferable airs toward the interior Republicans will be able to digest it with profit to themselves.

The evil is one which demands an immediate remedy, and the indications are strong that an attempt will be made to apply one at the approaching State Convention. The New-York Tribune very gravely advises the organization of Citizens' Associations in all the counties similar to the one now existing in New-York City; but, with all due deference, we beg leave to suggest that the cat under that meal is very plainly to be discerned. We don't propose to be brought under the rule of the Metropolitan clique, for that would be the inevitable result of the Tribune's plan. If we may judge of the visible fruits of the New-York Association, known by that name, it is an institution which we had better be without. It would be exceedingly nice, no doubt—to the managers—for the ancient political barnacles who call themselves the "Citizens' Association" in the Metropolis, to have subordinate branches throughout the State; but the party outside the City do not propose to be subordinated. They have far more confidence in their own ability to organize and achieve success than they have in the models of leaders of Gotham, and they propose to organize for themselves if they feel disposed to decline the Tribune proposition "with thanks."

The NEW-YORK TIMES takes a very different view of the matter, and proposes a far more practical method of removing the evil complained of. It proposes that the Republican voters shall rule in this matter, and that the districts where the Democratic majorities are the absentees shall have the least to say in the councils of the party. This seems to us equitable. If the Republicans of New-York City cannot get along harmoniously, and act with decency, the TIMES thinks, and we think with it, that the "rural districts" should take the matter in charge and try if they cannot do better. The TIMES sums up the matter in these words: "But one course can be advantageously followed. These City Committees must be swept out of existence and a new committee selected that will command the respect and confidence of Republicans, and enable them to develop the full measure of party strength. It is idle to talk of compromise in the premises. The present committee, as a political and Conservative, are simply nuisances, kept up for the purpose of enabling certain men to acquire place. They are corrupt from beginning to end. The first thing to be done, then, is to clear them away as so much rubbish. This done, the work of fresh organization should not be difficult. It is a work which must be performed, if Republicans all, by the Republicans of other parts of the State; and for this purpose their interference is invoked."

TENNESSEE POLITICS.

Serenade to Governor Senter in Nashville—His Response.

From the Nashville Union, July 29.

A large crowd of the friends of suffrage and SENTER, accompanied by the Rock City Band, last night visited the rooms of the Governor, on the Square, for the purpose of attesting their appreciation of the bold, fearless and effective manner in which he has borne through the State the standard of free principles. After several stirring pieces by the band, Governor SENTER appeared, and addressed the crowd. He had just arrived from Gallatin, where he had been in conflict with the "Bald Eagle of the Mountains," and felt too weary to make a speech—if, indeed, it would be fair to do so in the absence of his competitor. He would be thoroughly refreshed, on occasion to pass without expressing his thanks to his friends for the honor they had done him personally, as well as the zeal they were manifesting in support of just principles. Governor SENTER said that he had now traversed the greater part of the State, discussing General STOKES in discussion before the people, and felt that he had not labored in vain. Upon the support of the franchise, the popular heart was beating in unison with the principles he had avowed in the commencement of the canvass. Even amid the blue mountains of East Tennessee, where it was said his position in regard to enfranchisement would not be popular, he found the honest masses sustaining his views, and confidently expected to obtain a majority of the votes cast in that division of the State. He had driven his competitor to the wall, and intended to give him no chance to escape. Assuring his friends that "the work was going bravely on," and that complete and glorious victory was certain on the 5th of August, the Governor again thanked his friends, and retired amid vociferous cheering.

Mr. Creswell's Endorsement of General Stokes.

The following is a copy of the telegram from Postmaster-General CRESWELL to General STOKES:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 24, 1869.

To Hon. W. B. Stokes, City Hotel:

Believing you to be the true representative of the Republican Party of Tennessee, I earnestly advocate your election, and I trust that every sound Republican in your State will rally enthusiastically to your support. The President is absent from the city, but I am confident that I declare his opinion and desire.

JOHN A. J. CRESWELL,
Postmaster-General.

Secretary Boutwell's Letter.

From the New-Haven Palladium, July 28.

Secretary BOUTWELL's letter to STOKES, in which he declares that he is greatly interested in the success of the latter, does not commit the Administration. It is guarded in its terms and only expresses the sentiments of the writer. We, nevertheless, regret that the Secretary did not refrain from taking any part in the bitter contest. There is not, apparently, so far as either STOKES or SENTER is personally concerned, much to choose between them, and it is unfortunate that the next Governor of Tennessee must be, in any event, a man who has shown an unlimited capacity for bluegrassism. Both were rebels when rebellion seemed likely to succeed, and of the sincerity of the conversion of each we will not attempt to doubt. But the platform upon which SENTER stands is the only one which can give peace to the state and heal the wounds left by the war. It is the policy which comes or later must prevail. Besides, Secretary BOUTWELL's letter comes too late to be of any use to STOKES, whom it was written to serve, and must offend those Republicans who will vote for SENTER. The Republican party is a local one, candidates are Republicans, and Secretary BOUTWELL has quite enough to do in managing the Treasury, in which he is succeeding admirably, without unnecessarily interfering in Tennessee.

Views of Another Republican Paper Upon the Secretaries' Action.

From the Detroit Post, July 29.

Undoubtedly Mr. BOUTWELL and Mr. CRESWELL have just as much right to favor the election of one of the candidates and to oppose the other, as though they occupied purely private stations. And so has the President. But we very much doubt whether it is wise in the Administration to take sides in the Tennessee election, or any of the southern elections wherein the Republican Party is divided. Certainly, if the Administration should undertake to throw its influence into the scale, it ought to be consistent, and support the same side in all the States. Now the Administration certainly did not actively support the Radicals in Virginia, and is denounced of disloyal hospitality upon the Conservatives. In Mississippi it is confidently predicted that Judge DENT will be the Conservative candidate, and that, being a relation of the President, he will receive the support of the Administration. Now for the Administration to sustain SENTER and the Radicals in Tennessee, and oppose SENTER and the Conservatives while favorably regarding WALKER and the Conservatives in Virginia, and DENT and the Conservatives in Mississippi, would certainly present a curious political mixture. No Administration can serve two masters at the same time. Therefore we doubt if Postmaster-General CRESWELL was at all authorized to report for the President as he did, or to state anything more than his individual wishes. And to report his letter and that of BOUTWELL, as quite probably ill-considered, unfriendly, and mischievous. Both letters ought to have carefully mentioned that they only presented the individual opinions of their writers, and carefully denied any disposition or intent to commit the Administration.

We are not sure but that it would be best for the State of Tennessee and the country that SENTER should be defeated and STOKES elected. We do not exactly like the Senter platform, but we boldly dislike the Senter alliance with unrepentant secessionists. If we could have STOKES' party upon the chief plank of SENTER's platform, we should be better satisfied. Still, sooner or later, the people of Tennessee must be trusted to settle their own State policy. If there is no danger of the Republicans losing power, let the Republican leaders go to the assistance of the party in Tennessee, and stump the State. But we do not anticipate any dangerous results from SENTER's possible and probable success. It is too late for a rebel reaction, if one should be attempted, to reverse the decisions of the war, or any of them. Equal rights for blacks and whites are secure; loyalty is secure, and, if the Democratic secession element should obtain power, it would lose it again next year if it should make any attempt at reaction. At least so it seems to us.

Meanwhile, it ought not to be forgotten that SENTER is supported by a considerable portion of the Republicans of Tennessee, including the great Republican leader, Senator BROWNLOW. The Administration cannot well afford to alienate and incur the hostility of this portion of the Republican Party in Tennessee, or to do anything calculated to render a division of the party in that State permanent. Rather should every effort be made to prevent a hardening of hearts between the two factions, and to preserve good temper, so that a union may easily be effected after the issue shall have been decided, and the results fully developed. So it seems to us, at least. At the same time, if the Administration does regard it as important that STOKES should succeed, and SENTER be defeated, it seems to us that it ought to manage to use whatever proper influence may be exerted without openly committing itself, and without allowing any members of the Cabinet to openly commit it. At the same time, we do not hesitate to acknowledge that there may be points in the situation which we do not rightly or fully appreciate, and that BOUTWELL and CRESWELL may be right, and our judgment not properly informed; so that we await the testimony of the event with patience, and with a candid disposition.

THE TEST OATH.

It Was Not Required in Louisiana—Views of the House Reconstruction Committee.

From the Richmond Whig, July 30.

From the following document it appears that even the most Radical members of the Reconstruction Committee (including Mr. BOUTWELL, now the most Radical member, as is understood, of the Cabinet,) stand opposed to General CAREY in the test-oath business. The was a telegram sent to the Governor of Louisiana with reference to the Legislature elect of that State:

WASHINGTON, June 30, 1869.

To Governor Warmoth, New-Orleans:

We think that persons disqualified under the Fourteenth article of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States are not eligible to your Legislature. This is to be determined by the respective Houses, but no oath can be imposed except the oath prescribed by the State Constitution.

(Signed,) JAMES WILSON,
Chairman Judiciary Committee.
(Signed,) GEO. S. BOUTWELL.
(Signed,) J. F. FARNSWORTH.
(Signed,) H. L. PAINE,
Reconstruction Committee.

This goes a bow-shot beyond anything that has been claimed in this State. It makes the Legislature the judge as to whether the Federal Constitution has power to disqualify a member. We have not thought of making any such claim. On the contrary, we carefully selected candidates who were not obnoxious to the Fourteenth Amendment, thereby showing our sense of obligation to obey its provisions. But we did not select candidates who could take the test oath, because no conception of that being required entered the mind of any one, and we could not, who were trying by every means to embarrass and defeat us, for they, too, brought out and, in some cases, elected men who cannot take that oath.

TEXAS POLITICS.

Address of A. J. Hamilton to the People of the State.

General A. J. HAMILTON has published an address to the people of Texas, giving his reasons for announcing himself as a candidate for Governor of the State under the new Constitution. He says he is in full sympathy, so far as he knows or has reason to believe, with the administration of President GRANT, and that he is supported by the mass of the Republican Party of the State. He continues:

"But because I am receiving a generous support from the Democratic Party, who have no candidate, there are a few extremists—destructives, rather—who, claiming to belong to the Republican Party, denounce both me and the Democratic Party as guilty of some unknown crime—some hidden design, some monstrous atrocity—men whose highest and only idea of Republican Government is, that office is to be secured to them by restricting the rights of others. It is absurd, by those men that the Democracy seek a victory through me. This is but a compliment to the intelligence of the people; for such a purpose, if attempted to be executed, would only render me powerless to accomplish the object for which I am elected.

General HAMILTON says that if elected he will endeavor to see the laws faithfully executed; that he will seek to promote immigration; will favor State aid to railroads, and will labor to carry into effect such a system of public schools as will meet the wants of the children of the State, of both races, which, in his opinion, can be best effected by separate schools for the two races and a fair division of the school fund between them according to numbers. In conclusion, he says:

Fellow-citizens, I do not seek the office of Governor for the sake of the office; but may have expressed the opinion that the position which I occupy will enable me, if elected, to effect something toward healing the wounds of the past and restoring fraternal feeling among the people. To live to see this accomplished is the fervent hope that animates my heart to-day—to aid in the accomplishment of this great work is my highest earthly aspiration. I own, too, that after all that has transpired during these years of sorrow through which we have passed, my heart could greatly rejoice to a generous acquiescence on the part of the people of Texas in willingness to faithfully serve them. Whatever the result may be—whether in public or private life—I shall not cease to labor for the restoration of peace in society, free civil government, and the solid prosperity and happiness of the people.

AUSTIN, June 30, 1869. A. J. HAMILTON.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

DICTIONARY OF COMMERCE AND COMMERCIAL NAVIGATION. By J. R. McCULLOCH. New-York: SCRIBNER, WELFORD & Co. London: LONGMAN, GREEN & Co.

"It is not, in truth, a book for one country or one age, but for all countries and all ages, and will always be regarded as a noble monument of profound thinking, various learning and persevering research, applied to purposes of the highest interest and importance." These words of our author himself, with reference to ADAM SMITH'S Wealth of Nations, are, in a certain degree, applicable to his own great work, the Dictionary of Commerce, a new edition of which is now brought out in England and in this country. Since its first publication in 1832 it has been a grand authority in the matter of British commerce, as most people know. But it is singular enough that the first idea of such a work, its practical origin, as most, was not British. The French, who have anticipated their neighbors in so many things, and who had omnibuses and street Post Office boxes in Paris over two hundred years ago—were the first to formulize their ideas of general trade in a mercantile dictionary. It was got up with Government help and patronage in 1723 by the brothers SAVARY—a name also associated with the origin of steam navigation—and was the first work of the kind in Europe. In 1765, the Abbe MORELLET made an effort to bring out another work of the kind, but failed. In 1782 such a one was published, which was long the merchant's guide in France.

In England, meantime, the earliest work on this plan was published in 1751 by MALACHY POSTLETHWAITE, being mainly compiled and largely translated from the SAVARY'S book; and another edition of this was brought out in 1774. In 1761, RICHARD ROLT published his Commercial Dictionary, the "best part" of which, says Mr. McCULLOCH, was written by Dr. SAMUEL JOHNSON, no other than the author of Rasselas. This part was the "Preface," in which the writer set down his solid and stately generalities in a very imposing manner, and quite in the style of a political economist. In 1766, another work on the subject was published by THOMAS MORTIMER, Consul of the Netherlands. One or two others followed on the plan of the preceding, but more or less wanting in what McCULLOCH, with his keen Scotch sagacity in perseverance, at last undertook to supply.

JOHN RAMSAY McCULLOCH was born in 1789, of a respectable family of small proprietors, at Whithorn, in Wigtonshire, and had the advantages of schooling and instruction which Scotland was always anxious to afford to all conditions of her people. Those of young McCULLOCH were very favorable; for his grandfather, Dr. LAING, of Glasserton, in the same shire, had a very good library, and his stepfather, Dr. DEMPSTER, was another educated man, who took care of his education and sent him, at the age of 16, to the University of Edinburgh. Here the lad attended the lectures of Sir JOHN LESLIE, and of Dr. THOMAS BROWN, the metaphysician, a teacher of the old school, who found no favor with his Western pupil. The latter, with the self-assurance which belonged to him at all periods of his life, disliked the Doctor's logic, and said he got no more benefit from it than if it had been delivered in Greek. His feelings in the matter were those of JONATHAN SWIFT, OLIVER GOLDSMITH and so many others before him, who held the jargon of KEKEREMANTHUS and BURGERSDICIUS in such remarkable aversion. His thoughts were at first turned to the law, and his friends had influence enough to make him one of the Writers to the Signet—a vocation made so singularly honorable by the rapid and laborious pen of WALTER SCOTT. But he had as little taste for the law as for college metaphysics, and so drifted, by a sort of elective affinity, into the theoretic ways of trade and commerce, and at the same time into the habit of writing politics in the journals, on the side of the Whigs—which last might be considered a natural kind of tendency in one born in the very region where the word Whig came, as it were, out of the ground, and Whiggery grew up into stalwart manhood, with a claymore in its hand. He "flashed his maiden sword" on DUNDAS, of course,—the Satyrnore of all Scotch Liberals, as PITT was of the Foxites in England; and in the same bold and perfervid spirit, married ISABELLA STEWART at the age of 22. In 1817 he was a contributor to the Scotsman, and in a short time became editor of that paper. "At the time when this journal was set on foot," says McCULLOCH, "the newspaper Press of Scotland was in the most degraded state imaginable, without talent, or even the pretence of independence." He largely helped to change all that, and at the same time gave the journal a tone of trade and political economy, which won upon the natural genius and predilections of the reading public. Simultaneously he began to contribute articles on that subject to the great "Blue and Buff" luminary of the North; and it is interesting to less abstruse and economic natures to find how a man of his calibre could feel such delight on seeing himself, for the first time, in the prints of the Edinburgh Review. JEFFREY liked his papers and his philosophy from the beginning; and up to 1826, McCULLOCH had contributed seventy-eight of them, now published separately. He argued for free trade with France in 1819, attacked the Corn laws at the same date, and also denounced the charter of the East India Company and the Navigation laws—preparing the public mind for those great legislative changes which came about in the end.

In 1828, the friends of McCULLOCH tried to establish for him a Chair of Political Economy in the Edinburgh University. But they could not bring it about. He was too great a propagandist, and the people of Edinburgh were too much against him. He then went down to the broader and more liberal arena of London, where he delivered lectures on political economy to the legislators, merchant princes and most intelligent audiences of the capital; where, in 1827, the University of London made him its Professor of Political Economy. In 1838 he published a new edition of SMITH'S Wealth of Nations. In 1832 he resigned the Chair, and in the same year, after a preparation of near twenty years, brought out his Commercial Dictionary, which at once took the place of all other works of the same character. In 1836 he published his Descriptive and Statistic Account of the British Empire, and, in 1841, his Geographical Dictionary—works which must have cost him an enormous amount of research and labor. In 1838 he obtained the reward of his long Whig advocacy, in the Comptrollership of the Stationery, which he got from Lord MELBOURNE and held till his death. But he always thought more of the world than of his "Stationery," and often wished he could come back to it at the end of three hundred years, to see how it should be getting along. JEFFREY once, in reply to such a wish, said he would be thankful to come back in a shorter interval, say at the end of 1900. In 1846 Sir ROBERT PEEL signalized his sudden swinging round the circle of the Corn laws by giving McCULLOCH a pension of $300 a year—paying for the plagiarism while he schmoozed edged the corn, or rather "corn logic," of our political economist. McCULLOCH was greatly gratified, and was always ready to refute or maltreat the assailants of the right honorable Baronet. He was now much more at ease in his possessions; but he kept his old enormous appetite for work, and brought out Catalogues Raisonnees of Political Economy, and other tracts in succession, full of all sorts of bibliographical and biographical facts and figures on that subject. He was a strong thinker; what he saw he saw clearly, and with his vigorous convictions he had an equally vigorous propensity to insist on them, having no mercy on anything earthly that could not stand the test of a statistical common sense. In that respect, he was as hard as any of his own facts; but, in all other respects, he was a sociable and kindly man in the midst of his family or in intercourse with his friends. He died at his office in Westminster, Nov. 11, 1864, in his seventy-sixth year.

The present edition of the Commercial Dictionary is edited by McCULLOCH'S Secretary and son-in-law, HUGH G. REID, who worked with him for many years in preparing its contents, and who now presents it with every addition demanded by the latest changes of the commercial world, and in every respect up to the present year of production and progress. Many articles have been recast to receive the benefits of discovery, and others have been added—such as those on "Petroleum" and "Telegraphs." This great and valuable work, of over fifteen hundred pages, is not to be described in a short notice, except in general terms. Here may be found a notice of everything that enters into the curriculum of the world's commerce, whether it grows out of the ground or under the water, or is produced by art—with its character, origin and history; while every chief mart, port, station and emporium of trade on the globe has its own proper and adequate record. Our own great cities have their due notice, and the charts and statistics connected with them are drawn and formulized according to the latest and best authorities. We have here a dozen large maps of the great continents and the chief states of the world, and thirty charts of cities, estuaries, rivers, with their lines of streets and their various depths of anchorage—a perfect and orderly wilderness of things, from "cranberries" or "coprolites" in a corner, to the grandeur of the "East India Company," the "Cotton" harvest of North America, "California," and the "Canals" of all the world; from "balsaches" and "bends" to the "Bank of England" and the Harbor of Trincomalee, "Bonded" from the "cane" (wine vessel) and the "audit," at the beginning, to the "Zodiacs" and the German "Zollverein" of the last pages. Altogether, this comprehensive work, at once so minute and so magnificent, is well worth the attention, not alone of the men of trade, but of statesmen also, and, indeed, of all intelligent public writers whose business it may be to enlighten others as well as themselves. It is as convenient a thing in an editor's room as in a ship-owner or banker's office. But it is peculiarly the trader's manual, and in this respect it will be found to be a whole "mercantile library" in itself. Its typographical "getting-up" is in the best English style of execution.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL.—A Series of Readings and Discourses thereon. By ARTHUR HELPS. New-York: JAMES MILLER.

A new edition of a very agreeable publication, strongly recommended by reviews and other organs of criticism, and also made popular by a good many merits of its own. It is on that subject of human life, with its manners and its tendencies, which in all ages, from the time of THEOPHRASTUS and SENECA to those of ROCHEFOUCAULD and LE BRUYERE, and on to Poor RICHARD and MARTIN TUPPER, has so interested the readers of the world—justifying the well-known verse of ALEXANDER POPE—

"The proper study of mankind is man."

It is to little purpose that critics have laughed at Mr. TUPPER, and disparaged some other poets who make their stanzas unctuous with the obvious moral conclusions and saws of life. The general taste is pleased with such things, so may be seen in the liking for proverbs which exists in most countries—a propensity which it would not be so very safe to laugh at, after all. Such being the case, a work like the one before us need not have any very profound disquisition, or poetic fancy, or originality of thought to recommend it and make it attractive, and we have an idea that none of those things will be found in any remarkable degree in the colloquies of our "Friends." Mr. HELPS is a man of reading and observation, of sober ideas and quiet expression, which gravity and sense, but never disturb or strongly suggest. His writing is mainly in the dramatic mode; but the conversations are not very animose or sprightly, nor do they wind into a subject after the manner which GOLDSMITH attributed to EDMUND BURKE. The interlocutors here are Ellesmere, Milverton, Dunsford, Medhurst and Daylmer, names which in themselves exactly indicate the rather formal manner and spirit of these conversations; the talkers having no individual character at all, and only serving as mouthpieces for the sentiments of the author, who might have managed better; and who, furthermore, when he brings a pair of charming young ladies into his discourses, does not give them a word to say. There is a great want of gallantry in such an arrangement, to say the least of it.

But a critic of manners, appearances and tendencies may be very agreeable without being very dramatic; and Mr. HELPS has made himself very agreeable to a multitude of readers, who find him a very safe and pleasant companion, never going beyond their own depth in the water and never attempting to fly over their heads in a balloon. His subjects are all familiar and his manner of treating them such as to suggest a similarity or coincidence of thought in the reader who, thus, in the most obvious way, is enabled to appreciate the merit of his author. A crowd of passages may be quoted in illustration of this; but the taste of readers will show the particular style and philosophy of the work. It is on "Family Relations":

"I know that there is a great deal which is eminently difficult in relationship. Take the case of parents. Their lives seem to be spent sometimes in giving and refraining and forbidding. I go out and see Walter on the water; in a little boat with crowded sail, and I have to call him in, and forbid the sailing. I next find him injuring my new gates which had just been painted. I have to forbid that. Shortly afterward I catch him mirroring stones at anybody or something which does not require to have stones thrown at it. Then he is wet through, and I am peremptory in insisting upon a change of clothes. All day long sometimes, in the management of children, it is 'don't, don't, don't.' One wonders that they can do anything at all. But they do, and if they do not they will. I am but just beginning to love my father (who has been dead many years) as I ought. How well I remember on some occasion, when he wanted to take care of me just as I do of Walter about the change of wet clothes, I was insolent—for so it seemed to me then. 'Could not I take care of myself? Was I always to be interfered with? &c., &c. But now I appreciate all his tenderness. I could go and do penance for those thoughts, as Dr. Johnson did, bare-headed, in the market-place of Uttoxeter, for his sins against the Genius of his father. Yes, as Dr. Johnson! How he always comes up in any serious talk among Englishmen, and what a loving reverence we have for him, notwithstanding his constitutiveness in conversation, of which Dunsford, I know, disapproves, and I think Hartley.

"To go back to relationship. There is great comfort in the thought that, though there may be little troubles and disagreements, yet the tendency of the thing is to come right in the end. Walter goes, and looks like an injured Walter, when I have saved him from a fever by this peremptory order to change his clothes. But the day will come when he will sigh and say, 'I wish I had anybody now who cared whether I was wet or dry, and who should prevent me from throwing brickbats inadvisedly.' The same after-growth of affection pervades relationship. It is full of tenderness, duties, responsibilities, over-familiarities; but, in the long run it comes right; and every day, as they grow older, people become more attached to those relations left to them, and discern that, after all, the burden of relationship may be heavier, but is far more tolerable than that of loneliness."

Reappearance of a Man Stolen by Indians Thirty-Three Years Ago.

From the Sandusky (Ohio) Register, July 26.

Thirty-three years ago there lived in Lewiston, Logan County, a farmer by the name of HARRIS HOPKINS, who had a child, a boy, between three and four years of age. One day, while the farmer was at work in a field some distance from the farm-house, the boy started from the house across the fields to see his father. The last seen of the little fellow was when he left the house. Hundreds of people turned out to search for the lost child. The river was dragged, the woods searched, rewards offered, but all to no purpose. After days of weary and anxious search the little fellow was given up by the parents and sympathizing friends. The few Indians living in that neighborhood were friendly and peaceable, and no suspicion ever attached to them, and the affair was forgotten or only talked of as a mysterious disappearance. The HOPKINS family at length left their old home and settled in Illinois, and up to ten days ago none of their old neighbors in Logan County had expected to see any member of the family again. The astonishment of the old settlers in and about the neighborhood can be conceived when, week before last, a tall man, browned by exposure to sun and storm, and speaking the broken English of the half civilized Indians, made his appearance at Lewiston, and claimed to be the child missed thirty-three years ago. He stated that a Cherokee Indian, wandering through that section, had enticed him from the field as he was going in search of his father, and had carried him to the far West. The old Chief had treated him as his own son, and having been taken away at so young an age, the memory of his parents and former life had faded from his mind. For thirty odd years he lived as an Indian, and supposed that he was the son of the old Chief, who, claimed to be his father. A few months since the Chief, then high in rank in the Cherokee nation, and very advanced in age, found himself on his death-bed. Shortly before he died he called his adopted son to his bedside, and informed him who and what he was. As soon as the old Chief was dead, he hurried, Hopkins came back to Logan County in search of his parents, whom he found had moved to Champaign City, Ill. He, however, remained during last week at Lewiston, to satisfy the curiosity of the old settlers who had added in the search for his lost playmate, years ago. His reappearance has caused quite as much excitement in Logan County as did his sudden and mysterious disappearance a third of a century ago.

FINANCIAL.

Mr. Boutwell's "Five Per Cent."

From the Chicago Tribune, July 27.

Our Washington special yesterday contained the following rose-colored statement of the financial situation, which needs some sifting:

"The result of BOUTWELL'S administration of the Treasury Department appears in the proposition from a German house in Frankfort to loan our Government $200,000,000 at 5 per cent, which the Secretary has, of course, been obliged to decline. His view is that he may, within a year, borrow all the money we want at 4 per cent, or certainly at 4½ per cent, and present indications seem to be, though it is not intended to speak for the Secretary, that he will not attempt such a loan for the purpose of paying off the five-twenties due now, or whenever the Government chooses to so call in its bonds. A private letter to the Secretary from a well-advised source on the Continent proposes the opinion that a loan at 4½ per cent can easily be negotiated in Europe within six or eight months."

At the present time our six per cent. bonds are selling for 120 in greenbacks, which with gold at 135, are not worth exactly seventy-five cents on the dollar. The bond of the Government for $100 in gold, with six per cent. interest, also in gold, is worth $66 40 in American gold. To pay $6 in gold for the use of $60 in gold for one year is to borrow money, not at six per cent., but at six and eight-tenths per cent. This is lower than we could have borrowed money at any time before since 1861; and, since we have not yet been able to borrow at six per cent., what means the dispatch that we are offered $200,000,000 at five per cent.? What are the terms? Does the Frankfort house desire to take our five per cent bonds at par, in gold? If so, it can go into the market and buy them at 111 in greenbacks, which, with gold at 135, is the equivalent of $82 22 in gold. Why should the Frankfort house press our Government to sell it at 100 what it can buy in Frankfort at 82? As existing rates of interest are six and eight-tenths per cent. on the $-one at their present value, if Mr. BOUTWELL could borrow $200,000,000 at five per cent., the saving to the Government would be $8,400,000 per year. Yet we are told that Secretary BOUTWELL declines to save the more trifle of $8,000,000 because he expects within a year to save $80,000,000 by reducing the interest on the whole debt to four per cent. Until we can get below six and eight-tenths per cent., we shall esteem it a favor to know what European capitalist is desirous to loan us money at five. Look at the generosity of the French capitalist. He can now invest $200,000,000 in five per cent. bonds at 82 22-100, and thus get seven per cent. for his money, or $21,000,000 a year interest, besides a net gain of $66,600,000 on the principal by buying it below par. But he generously prefers to sacrifice all gain on the principal, and by buying the same bonds at par, to reduce his income to $14,000,000 a year. We know not which most to admire, the magnanimity of the capitalist, who foregoes $8,000,000 a year, or the shrewdness of the Secretary, who refuses to accept a profit to that amount, but is waiting for somebody to despoil his private income to a much larger extent.

A Minister on Trial for Alleged Immoral Conduct.

From the Cincinnati Commercial.

PITTSBURG, Tuesday, July 27.

The trial of Rev. J. P. LINN came up before the Ohio Presbytery of the Old School Presbyterian Church to-day, on charges of unministerial, indecent and immoral conduct, which had been preferred against him. The specifications under each charge were numerous. Under the first charge he was alleged to be guilty of violating the secrecy of the session, while in charge of a session; of falsely holding up the frivolous conversation of his females immediately after the conclusion of services; refusing to obey the injunction of the Presbytery; appropriating a sermon, and claiming it as his own; with indecent conduct with females, resulting in their withdrawal from the congregation.

Under the second charge the specifications set forth that he was not truthful; that he denied having received lewd publications by mail; that he had followed a servant girl on her way to the confessional, in such a manner as to convince her that he intended criminal violence; that he conducted himself, one evening, on the Suspension Bridge, as to elicit the remark from a gentleman, "What are you doing with my wife?" and that he lost his hat in a scuffle which ensued; that he came to his room in Beatty Hall, at a late hour of the night, bleeding and bruised, and his wife announced as the cause to have received those injuries; that his conduct toward young ladies in Allegheny was such as to induce them to call their father for protection; that several females withdrew from church in consequence of his demeanor; that his conduct toward females was improper.

After the charges and specifications had been read, in response to the Moderator, Mr. LINN pleaded "Not guilty." One witness stated that a young lady told him that Mr. LINN had visited her more frequently than she desired, and that she intended to withdraw; that he had attempted to kiss her, or made proposals so to do; that her father had come in, and requested him (LINN) to go, and that he had done so. The case occupied the attention of the Presbytery all day, and the trial will probably be concluded to-morrow. It is thought that Mr. LINN will be dropped from the ministry.

General Carr's Recent Victory.

From the Chicago Journal.

Generals SHERMAN and SHERIDAN have telegraphed their congratulations to General E. A. CARR, of the army, on his recent dashing military expedition against the hostile Indians of the Far West. General PARKER, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, gives it as his opinion that the effect of General CARR'S recent success over the savages will be to stop the Indian raids and outrages on the Western frontier. About fifty of the redskins were killed, and a large number were captured and are now prisoners at the military barracks at Omaha. These are the same Indians who have been committing depredations in Western Nebraska and Kansas during the past few months, and their suppression is one of the most important achievements of recent Indian campaigns.

Wholesale Arrest of Disreputable Women.

Captain WEAST, of the Fourteenth Ward, on Wednesday night caused the arrest of a large number of disreputable women, as they were becoming an unmitigated influence in the neighborhood and caused his officers a great deal of trouble. The raid of the Police resulted in the arrest of Tilly Brown, Margaret Walsh, Mary Jane Lamb, Laura Anderson, Mary Weston, Louisa Stanley, Mary Williams, Mary Allen, Lizzie Smith, Louisa Smith, Louisa Hays, Annie Dunning, Ellen Hill, Lizzie McMahon, Emma Dayton, Cannon Ball, Mary Blanchard, Mary Stevens, Louisa Coleman, Kate Campbell, Maggie Maher, Sarah Simpson, Kate Smith, Nellie Lopez, Josephine Wood, Maggie Anderson, Annie Donohue, Nellie Maloy, Maggie Miller, Mary Johnson, Mary Brown and Carrie King. These women presented a motley appearance when arraigned before Justice HOGAN yesterday morning at the Tombs Police Court, several of them being handsomely and expensively dressed, and others being ragged and dirty. Several exhibited traces of recent dissipation, and a few appeared to feel ashamed of their humiliating predicament. While on their way to the Police Court, these wretched creatures were followed, at a respectable distance, by a large gauntlet of the crowds of people gathered on the sidewalks near the Station-House in Spring-street, and at different points along the route. The Magistrate, after a patient hearing in each case, decided to discharge a few of the prisoners, on their promise for examination, or, in other words, to ten days' imprisonment unless they can pay a fine of $10 each. The scene in the Court-room while these women were being disposed of was a most pitiable one. Some of the prisoners uttered imploring cries and others indulged in imprecations as they were marched off to the cells.

Release of Two Fillibusters.

A dispatch was received yesterday at the United States Court Building from General VOGELE, Commandant at Fort Hamilton, stating that O'NEILL and IRVIN, the two contumacious Cuban fillibusters who recently declined to be liberated from Fort Lafayette, were willing to sign the necessary papers. At the time of the general release of the Cuban prisoners by District-Attorney PIERREPONT, the two men in question said that they would not sign a parole and assume non-belligerent conditions, preferring to remain in close confinement rather than do so. They were then kept in Fort Lafayette a short time, but were subsequently removed to Fort Hamilton, where they announced that they were ready to submit to the Neutrality laws. Commissioner SUTHERLAND proceeded to the fort after the receipt of General VOGELE'S message, and saw the captives, who gave their personal recognizance not to participate in any more hostile expeditions. They were subsequently sent on their way rejoicing.

Scathed Disaster—Action of the Grand Jury.

In the Court of Oyer and Terminer yesterday, just before the trial of Policeman CAMPBELL, charged with murder, was resumed, the Grand Jury entered, and the foreman presented a communication to the Court, the substance of which, as announced by the Judge, was to call attention to the destruction of life and property resulting from the want of protection or safeguards on the various railroads entering the City.

Judge CARDOZO said that, in reference to this communication, he had only to say that, if any instances of loss of life or property from such cause should come to the knowledge of the Grand Jury, it was their duty to take cognizance thereof, and they would receive all necessary aid from the District-Attorney and the Court in the proper proceedings against the Company.

THE FIRST WARD MURDER.

Sixth Day—The Summing Up by Counsel on Both Sides Completed—The Court to Charge the Jury this Morning.

THE Court of Oyer and Terminer opened yesterday at the usual hour, the crowd and interest manifested in the case of CAMPBELL being unabated. The jury having taken their seats, Mr. A. J. VANDERPOOL submitted the following points, and asked that the Court charge in accordance therewith on behalf of the prisoner:

First—The jury are the exclusive judges of all the facts in the case, and also of the credibility of the witnesses.

Second—The jury are to presume the defendant innocent until his guilt is established beyond all reasonable or rational doubt. The law presumes innocence of the act done and innocence of the guilty intent. The accused may stand upon the presumption of fact, and until every ingredient of the crime is proved, and when there is any reasonable or rational doubt in the mind of the jury as to any of the ingredients having been satisfactorily proved, the jury will acquit the defendant.

Third—The defendant is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt, and neither a mere preponderance of evidence, nor any weight of preponderance, is sufficient to convict the defendant, unless it generates full belief of every material allegation in the indictment to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt, for it is an axiom of law that the evidence must be consistent with the rational hypothesis of his innocence, or the jury will find the defendant not guilty.

Fourth—The evidence of the good character of the prisoner must be considered by the jury, together with the other facts and circumstances in the case, and if his good character is proven to the satisfaction of the jury, should turn the scale in favor of the defendant when the testimony on the part of the prosecution is uncertain or doubtful.

Fifth—If the accused Officer JAMES LONG engaged in the affray upon a business in West-street, as testified to by him, (the accused,) it was his legal duty to arrest him without warrant, and to take him to the Station-house, and if he was resisted by the deceased in the discharge of that legal duty, and the homicide was accidentally committed in overcoming such resistance, the shooting was justifiable, and the prisoner should be acquitted.

Sixth—If the homicide was committed by the accused in the lawful defence of his person, where there was reasonable ground to apprehend a design on the part of the deceased to commit a felony or do bodily harm, and there was imminent danger of such design being accomplished, the shooting by Officer CAMPBELL was justifiable, and he is entitled to an acquittal.

Seventh—Where persons having authority to arrest or imprison, and using proper means for that purpose, are resisted in so doing, and the party making the arrest is killed in the struggle, the homicide is justifiable, and the officer in such a case need not retreat, as in the ordinary cases of se defendendo.

Eighth—If the jury find that at the time of the homicide there was a riot in progress, it was the duty of Officer CAMPBELL to do all in his power to suppress it, and if in so doing he accidentally fired the shot which caused the death of the deceased, the homicide was justifiable, and he is entitled to a verdict of acquittal.

Ninth—If the jury shall find that the shot were accidentally fired by Officer CAMPBELL in keeping and preserving the public peace, the homicide is justifiable, and the prisoner is entitled to a verdict of acquitting.

Tenth—If the jury believe from the evidence that at the time the shot was fired the prisoner had a reasonable ground to apprehend a design on the part of the deceased to commit a felony, or do bodily harm, and that there was imminent danger of such design being accomplished in another of evidence, and the prisoner's testimony as to one or both of these facts must be taken to be true, no evidence to the contrary having been adduced, then the shooting was justifiable, and the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal.

Eleventh—If the jury believe from the evidence that at the time the shot was fired the prisoner had a reasonable ground to apprehend a design on the part of the deceased to do him a great personal injury or bodily harm, as well as the danger of such design being accomplished, and a danger of such design being accomplished in another of evidence, and the prisoner's testimony as to one or both of these facts must be taken to be true, no evidence to the contrary having been adduced, then the shooting was justifiable, and the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal.

Twelfth—If the jury believe the testimony of MATTHEW CAMPBELL, he is entitled to a verdict of not guilty.

Thirteenth—If the jury believe the facts with reference to the killing of MORRIS LONG was correctly stated by MATTHEW CAMPBELL, in his testimony, he is entitled to a verdict of acquittal, and the prisoner is then and there to be acquitted.

At the conclusion of the reading of the points Mr. CHARLES S. SPRINGER arose and commenced to sum up for the defence. For a quarter of a century past, he said, the learned District-Attorney had been engaged as a public prosecutor. For the same period it had been his lot to have been engaged in defending the vilest classes. From the past history and experience of both it would be appropriate that they should change places, yet to-day he found himself in the performance of his duty arrayed on the side of law and order, while the learned District-Attorney, in the performance of his duty, was found prosecuting the cause of the violent and law-defying. His learned associate, Mr. HOLMES, in his able opening of the case, had stated erroneously that the prisoner had already passed through two ordeals, the first being before the Coroner's jury, and that before the Grand Jury. Neither of these could be properly denominated a hearing, for in neither case had the prisoner an opportunity to be heard. The Grand Jury, he continued, is a mere relic of barbarism, which the benefit of the reformed judiciary system, but which is destined, as other obsolete forms have been, to be finally swept out of existence. A Coroner's inquest is no less unjust and partial, for though an old woman charged with the stealing of a shawl may be entitled to an impartial hearing, yet when the question is one of charging a man with the highest crime, and he cannot summon a witness in his behalf, this finding may next pass before the Grand Jury, where he is equally unheard, and when an indictment is found there, unless the prisoner can then bring the matter before the petit jury, the accused may die without an opportunity to vindicate his innocence, and his children's children may find the indictment still on record against him. After adverting to the selection of the jury, and stating that the sole object of the counsel for the defense was to secure intelligent and impartial men, in which he was confident they had fully succeeded, he went on to say that though the indictment was for murder, yet he was confident the District-Attorney, in his wildest dreams, never dreamed that the case would be anything more than manslaughter. He was there to take the bold, though true ground, that the crime was either murder in the first degree or nothing. The defence wanted from the jury no compromise of conscience in the form of a verdict for murder in the second degree, nor of manslaughter in any degree of the degrees of that crime. There is but one alternative, you must assume the responsibility of executing this man or of setting him free. After defining the various degrees of manslaughter and of murder in the second degree, contending that none of these could apply to the acts of the prisoner, Mr. SPRINGER moved on to discuss the question of the malice in the commence of the accused on the charge of murder in the first degree. In discussing this question, he said, it became necessary to inquire who is this man thus charged with crime. Is he a brothel-keeper, a rowdy, a thief, or a gambler coming up from the subterranean den of this City? No! The playmates of his youth, the families with whom he has boarded, those who have met him in social life, and the Captain under whom he serves in the Police, stamp him as a man whose character and disposition are without spot or blemish. Such is the kind of man both you and I wish to protect our wives, our sisters and our daughters, when perhaps on an errand they might be waylaid by ruffians and brutally ravished; and the District-Attorney will find before the end of the case, that public sentiment will demand of this man, this Captain, this wall of iron. What are the circumstances on which it is sought to strike this man down? A short time ago a trial was held in this Court-room, lasting until midnight, and at the midnight hour the jury render their verdict, and the prisoner's doom is announced, amid the stern sentiment of the City. Because the air was thick with a determination on the part of good citizens to take the law into their own hands, and an example became necessary to appease them. But, I assert, there is yet courage and honesty in the City left to be aroused and manifested by good citizens, to suppress the onward march of vice. The testimony of the witnesses for the prosecution was then severely criticised and their inconsistencies pointed out. FITZPATRICK, who, he believed, saw both of the deceased, was a witness called by them to strengthen his political position, swore to seeing the officer holding a pistol in one hand, his club in another, and at the same time was holding Long as that he could not get away. The testimony of MORIN showed that Long attacked the officer upon Spring-street; McGINN and HOLLAND contradicted each other, and MURPHY, the entire diamond, was false from beginning to end. Indeed, the contradictions are such throughout that they condemn the whole testimony, and if they had desired to make their testimony successful, they should first have met and agreed among themselves. The state of facts, it is due to the citizens of the First Ward, many of whom were known to him, and were of high respectability, that it is not they who give the ward its bad name, but strangers, chiefly maritime men, who come from other State, and meet the sights of vice which abound in some portions of the ward. The prisoner is entitled to his acquittal on two grounds; first, because he was in imminent danger of great bodily harm; and second, because for the time being he represented the majesty of the law. He was the law. The first proposition is amply sustained by the testimony for the defence, which shows that there was a crowd, that the crowd was violent and threatening, and that stones were thrown and the prisoner struck while held in the violent grasp of the deceased. All of these witnesses, among that the accused was in the most dangerous and perilous position, a position from which he was not justified in disarming the assailant, and if the jury should send him to a drunkard's grave. Disarmed, did I say? No! You may convict him, you may execute your sentence, but on a grave to which you shall consign the Officer Innocence shall spread by his side. The witnesses have laid stress on the fact that this disorderly mob was chiefly composed of women and children. Well, suppose it was. Have you forgotten the terrible riots of '63, when poor Colonel O'BRIEN lay weltering in his blood on one of the avenues? On that occasion one whose heart was not seared as with a hot iron against the impulses of humanity approached with a cup of water to wet the parched lips of the dying man, but was driven away by curses and oaths. That woman, too, was composed of women and children, yet none is say the less fiendish and violent because of that? Had CAMPBELL been trampled down in that mob and killed, as in all human probability he would have been but for the act of which he now stands accused, and his dead body borne in triumphal procession by his brother officers to the grave, so would have been instituted as a martyr fallen in defence of law and order, instead of having them as now clamoring for his blood. Mr. SPRINGER then criticised the testimony of CAMPBELL himself, which for calmness, sincerity, and manifest truthfulness must have impressed every one who heard it; and concluded his address of nearly three hours' duration, marked throughout by unusual force and eloquence, as follows: "And now, gentlemen of the jury, in the name of humanity, of order, of justice, all you would guard mother, wife, sister, daughter from indignity, from ruthless violence, all you would guard your children from being by such boys or men insulted, I ask you, I entreat, I implore, I demand in the name of life and liberty and security of property and person, that to-day you stand by this man, whose faithfulness as an officer is imputed as a crime."

At the close of his address Mr. SPRINGER was greeted with loud applause, which was quickly suppressed by the Court.

District-Attorney GARVIN followed in a brief address on behalf of the people. He wished, he said, that the case was as clear for the prisoner as the counsel on the other side seem to regard it. He had a duty, and the jury had a duty to perform, which was no child's play. It is not the first time he had stood between the living and the dead. He remembered in the riots of 1863 trying a case in another room in which the man was charged with setting fire to a house. That man was not from the First Ward, nor was the fire in the Twenty-ninth Ward, nor was it the first in the Twenty-first Ward which took place in that riot, and a majority of the fires succeeding occurred in upper wards, and in the midst of the more aristocratic of the community. I am not here, he said, to seek this man's blood, but to try this case in the line of my duty. God deliver me from seeking the blood of any man. The dead than is not here to tell his story; he sleeps his everlasting sleep at the hands of Matthew CAMPBELL. The crowd, the night and the hour, has been called in mock. Why, gentlemen, two boys get to wrestling in the street, and finally to fisticuff, and almost immediately there is a crowd surrounds them; a boy pointing his finger in the air, gathers a crowd around him, but he knows not why. On the facts the witnesses agree, and all the immaterial contradiction amounts to nothing, all being the result of the different stand-point from which the witnesses saw the transaction. What is there in the case that you really disagree about? The prisoner's duty then is a matter of wonder or nothing. I am not going to agree that this is a case of murder; I never thought it was; it lacks the essential elements of the crime. Here is a man, a head taller than the deceased, armed with a club and a revolver and the moral force of the law behind him, walking quietly along quietly, with another officer behind him. He is overtaken by the father of the boy, who inquires what his boy is arrested for; he is his father, not a stranger; it is his right to make such inquiry. Whatever ensues between them, a fact is first to be ascertained. That is, by experience, is enough to disperse any such crowd as that; they do disperse; the officer and Long are left contending alone; the officer is armed with a pistol and a club; with one blow of either he might have broken Long's arm and rendered him helpless; but he does not, on the contrary, he fires, and took the man's life. Was the firing of that shot necessary? That is the question, and the only question, for you to determine. The District-Attorney then read the definition of manslaughter in the second degree, and argued that the killing in the second that being unnecessary to save the accused from further injury or bodily harm at the hands of the deceased, it constituted that crime as exactly as if the statute had been made on purpose to meet this case. In conclusion, he claimed upon the jury to show by their verdict, that the police officer violates the law he shall be held amenable thereto as any other citizen, and demanded in the name of this great Commonwealth that they shall so pronounce.

After the conclusion of the District-Attorney's address, the Court adjourned until yesterday at 11 A. M., when it is expected the case will be concluded.

STOCK FORGERIES.

Extensive Forgery of Railroad Share Certificates—The Daring Operator in Custody and Held for Trial on Two Charges.

GEO. A. ABBOTT, a few weeks ago, purchased, at the office of HEATH & Co., brokers, at No. 18 Broad-street, two certificates of 100 shares each ($100 per share) of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, for the sum of $22,800. On Tuesday last ABBOTT again called at the office, and, presenting what purported to be the identical shares which he had purchased a short time previously, asked that they be at once disposed of, and the proceeds converted into United States Five-twenty coupon bonds. ABBOTT was so anxious to have the matter sold that one of the firm became suspicious, and on making an examination, found them to be cleverly-executed forgeries. It also ascertained that the genuine certificates had been cancelled on the books of the Railroad Company in this City, redeemed and canceled. ABBOTT was given in custody of Officer DOYLE, and on being arraigned before Alderman O'BRIEN, a few hours after, was committed for trial in default of bail.

The circumstances of ABBOTT'S arrest and commitment attracted the attention of several brokers, who found that they had been made the dupes of the prisoner, and very nearly made the means of swindling their customers. This discovery resulted in an additional complaint against ABBOTT, the facts being almost identical with those narrated in the first case. Having made all necessary investigation these gentlemen decided upon entering on a prosecution, the result being that Mr. CHAS. S. QUIMBY, of No. 11 Broad-street, appeared before Justice HOGAN yesterday and testified that on the 16th inst. the prisoner, GEORGE A. ABBOTT, came to him at the office of WILLIAM HEATH & Co., and purchased one certificate for one hundred shares (valued at $100 each) of stock in the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company in the States of Illinois and Iowa. This certificate bore the date of June 1, 1864, and was numbered 9,304, and was delivered to ABBOTT by the witness on the 27th inst. ABBOTT again called on QUIMBY, and delivered to him for sale a paper, purporting to be a certificate for one hundred shares in the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, given in favor of MARVIN BINDER & Co. dated New-York, March 26, 1869, and apparently having the genuine signatures of the President and Treasurer of the Company. Being the week's Mr. QUIMBY, in the course of business, ascertained that the certificate of stock received by him from ABBOTT was a counterfeit, copied or otherwise traced to Marvin Binder & Co. the Secretary of the Company exhibiting the same to him. Mr. QUIMBY therefore accused ABBOTT of having the counterfeit and forged certificate in his possession with the intent to fraudulently sell the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company, and also, that he had extracted the certificate annexed to the affidavit of Mr. Quimby, and had no hesitation in pronouncing it a forgery, as he had the original in his possession, it having been returned to the Company and cancelled. He further testified that the Company, in issuing the stock it is his duty to fill up the body of the certificates of stock; that the filling up of the original certificate exhibited by himself was in his own handwriting, and that the words "one hundred," and figures "100" are not in his handwriting.

Wm. B. BRADFORD, of No. 72 Broadway, also made an affidavit against the prisoner. He stated that on or about the 14th inst. ABBOTT called on him and delivered to him for sale on account the original certificate, already exhibited by Mr. HEATH be fastened on the inside, the room was forcibly opened. The occupant was found lying on the bed in an exhausted condition, so much so that he was summoned, but he found life extinct. On the table near the bed was subsequently discovered a bottle containing a small quantity of strychnine, the natural inference being that the deceased had poisoned himself. Coroner ROLLINS was notified to hold an inquest, which he ordered the remains to be removed to an undertakers, where a post mortem examination will be made by Drs. JOHN BEACH and WEISMANN. It has been ascertained that Mr. MAUS had been for some time addicted to constant intoxication. He was a native of Germany, and aged 24 years, having only one relative in this country. An inquest will be held to-day.

THE FRUIT-GROWERS' CLUB.

Fruits from California—Exhibition of Berries—Address of Hon. Wm. Parry.

The Association convened yesterday in Horticultural Hall, No. 20 Park-place, at 1:30 o'clock, and was called to order by one of the Vice-Presidents, Mr. A. M. POWELL.

At the suggestion of the Chairman, J. W. GREENOUGH alluded briefly to the shipment of California fruit to this City, from which it appears that there is a fair prospect that fruit in great abundance will soon be received from that golden region.

A letter was received from B. ARNOLD, of East Abington, inquiring about a certain tree-invigorator and insect-destroying powder advertised by Mr. BERT, of the West. Several members spoke of it as a humbug. THOMAS CAYANAGH thought the best tree-invigorator a good soil, well pulverized, and proper attention to pruning, and exterminating the insects by hand.

WARREN GALE, of Borton's Landing, Vt., communicated a letter of inquiry concerning the best period to put out strawberry plants. Indian corn, he said, is now growing on the ground. Would it be better to attempt to prepare the ground after the crop of corn has been removed next Autumn, and put out strawberry plants, or wait until the following Spring? The answer was that it would be much more satisfactory to prepare the ground as well as practicable the coming Fall, and plant the vines early in the Spring. It will be seen that this theory coincides with the recommendation of Mr. PARRY, in his remarks made in the address given before the Club.

The table was spread with some fine specimens of blackberries which were brought to the Club by Hon. WM. PARRY, of Cincinnatian, N. J., who, on being introduced by the Chairman, proceeded to give the following interesting address. He said:

MR. WM. PARRY ON THE CULTIVATION OF SMALL FRUITS.

The cultivation of small fruits is assuming a magnitude and importance that was unknown within the recollection of many of us. Heretofore it was a little fruit by a farmer for family use, or small patches raised by market gardeners, the products of which were retailed from their wagons or stalls, comprised the principal stock that was grown. Then but few of the inhabitants could indulge in fruits before peaches and apples were ripe. Now whole plantations of peaches are required on which to raise small fruits, and regular fruit trains are employed to carry it by railroad to the large cities to supply the millions residing in and near them, to whom the fruit that arrives early in the morning, can be sent fresh and in good order. The large population of densely-crowded cities may now partake freely of the most wholesome and delicious fruits to the great benefit of their health and economy of living, for several months during the hot, sultry weather, when so desirable and refreshing, before they could, in large fruits made their appearance. I have been from 80 to 120 acres of strawberries growing on single farms, 50 to 60 acres of raspberries, and from 20 to 70 acres of cultivated blackberries, requiring hundreds of hands men, women and children to pick and ship it, and find for many years, furnishing healthy and profitable employment for many who are unable to perform the heavier farm work. Thus for this week we have picked and shipped to market over 10,000 quarts of blackberries, mostly Wilson's Early and Kittatiny, and yesterday the Committee reported that last week I sent to market daily from 2,500 to 3,000 quarts, principally Wilson's Early and a fortnight previous from 2,500 to 3,000 quarts of raspberries. These several fruits follow in succession, so that the cultivation pickers, baskets, crates and fixtures required for raspberries can be used for blackberries and blackberries. It is necessary that ripe fruit should be carried quickly to market, so as to arrive early in the morning, to be distributed among the retail dealers and forwarded promptly to the consumers without delay on the road, or its value will greatly depreciate. Norfolk, Va., they have fast steamers which carry berries direct to New-York, a distance of 300 miles, for one cent a quart; while from Burlington County, New-Jersey, less than 100 miles, we pay fifty per cent more, or one and a half cents a quart, and frequently the train does not arrive until after the morning market is over, and the berries cannot be sold except at a great sacrifice. Last week my loss was from $20 to $30 per day, because the train was behind time. On the fourth and fifth days the fruit train was on time, and in consequence our berries had to be sold at eight cents per quart, which would have brought from twenty to twenty-five cents per quart if the train had been on time. The next day it arrived on time, and the same quality of fruit brought from 25 to 30 cents. I paid a half cent a quart for a difference in the receipts for the two quarts sold I sent of 320 qt. We picked 9,000 quarts on that day, and if all had been sent to New-York instead of the larger part to Philadelphia, the loss would have been five times as much, or $100. The only reason assigned for the delay was the large amount of transient business required to be done by the fruit train. There was so much drilling on and off at the different stations along the road that the fruit train could not arrive on time. Hence the inhabitants of this great City are cut off from a fresh fruit supply, as they should, nor do the producers get full remuneration for growing it, merely because the fruit train on the Camden and Amboy Railroad is so often behind time. Ripe and perishable fruit is delayed on the road, rapidly depreciating in value, while ordinary freight cars are being drilled on the intervening stations. We are having better crops of fruit this season than for many years past, and it may not be out of place to mention some that have done well, as those that did not succeed this year, with proper care, should be removed and replanted in cultivation. First on the list come strawberries. Perhaps there is no greater error in their treatment than Summer or Fall planting. Yet all who enjoy a bountiful supply of the delicious fruit, wish to have some growing next year on their grounds. Experienced cultivators, well versed in theory than practice, recommend Fall planting as a matter of economy, that the same ground can be used that has already produced a crop of vegetables, and they can get a crop of fruit the next year, instead of waiting till the year following; and those having plants for sale are generally ready to fill the orders for plants knowing full well they must be duplicated in the Spring or the planter will have beds of thin, scattering plants, unsightly to look at and no profit to the owner. Strawberry plants set properly in the Spring will grow and flourish as easily as a potato patch, while those set in the latter part of Summer require the utmost care to keep them alive, by supplying moisture and shade to protect them from the scorching sun. Next Spring the few plants that may have stood the unnatural treatment will be smothered in a rank growth of grass, that will require more labor and expense to keep down than would pay for all the strawberries that would grow on the really plants thus treated. Strawberries planted in the Fall require as much more labor and attention to make them succeed than when planted in the Spring that it can only be recommended when the soil is well adapted to some one choice variety, the value of which will compensate for the extra care required to grow a few plants out of season.

WHAT KINDS TO PLANT.

The largest strawberries of a bright red color bring the most money in market. Hence size and appearance are the most important and indispensable properties, and a strawberry without them can never be popular in market, notwithstanding its other good qualities. In selecting a few of the most profitable varieties to cultivate, any that have not these qualities in a good degree should be excluded. From a large list, in fruiting this year with me I should recommend the following, viz.: Wilson's Albany, Agriculturist, Boydenia No. 30, Charles Downing and Kentucky. The first-named, although not of the largest size, is remarkably firm, bears carriage a great distance, and keeps up well in the market. I received it from seed by BRYE BOYDEN, of New-Jersey. They are very large and showy berries, and brought $1 per quart in market this year, while other strawberries were plenty at one-fourth the price. The last two named are seedlings grown by the late Mr. DOWNING, of Newburgh; both are large bright red berries of delicious quality, and very much resemble each other in vigor and growth of the plants, size, productiveness, appearance and quality of the fruit. The Kentucky is, however, about ten days later in ripening its fruit than the Charles Downing and other large strawberries, and continues in fruit until raspberries commence, just filling the little interregnum in the berry season, supplying a deficiency in the list of small fruits that is very desirable. When the early strawberries in market were grown near by they were very productive, and ripened with the earliest varieties. But since, by the aid of steam, our markets are supplied with early fruits from the South before ours mature, we can do better with large varieties ripening at a later period, after the glut is over. I had intended to exhibit a few quarts of the Kentucky Strawberry at a meeting of this Club, but did not find time to do it. However, as the next best substitute for the fruit itself, I had an accurate drawing of it taken by the skillful and accomplished artist of Harper's Magazine, THEO. R. DAVIS, and will furnish a copy to hang in this room.

RASPBERRIES.

Soon after strawberries are gone raspberries commence, and if care is taken to select the most hardy and productive kinds, an abundance of delicious fruit may be furnished during their time of ripening. Heretofore the most important properties have been lost sight of indiscriminately, the shades of difference in the qualities of some tender varieties that require as much care and attention as foreign grapes to produce a crop of fruit. Let us drop those fallacies, and commence at the stand-point that any raspberry well smothered in sugar and cream is good enough for the table. Then look around for such plants hardy and productive enough to carry a bright red color, large and firm enough to carry well to market. Whoever will produce a raspberry combining these five qualities will greatly benefit mankind, and deserve a liberal compensation for his services. There have been many new varieties introduced within a few years claimed to be excellent, which after a short time have passed out of notice, simply because they were not hardy and productive, two indispensable properties that should belong to every raspberry worth cultivating, and some that have no other recommendation are very popular. The Doolittle Black and Philadelphia are extensively grown; more acres planted and more bushels of fruit produced than of any other two kinds, although the small size and dark color of the former are against it, and none equine the dull purplish red and soft yielding flesh of the latter; yet they are more largely cultivated than any other of better quality, merely because they are hardy and productive. The size and color of the Clarke raspberry induced many of us to hope it would prove valuable; but after fruiting it six Summers and growing several acres of them, I have discarded it as a dead crop. It is not sufficiently productive nor hardy enough for market, and will hereafter be classed as an amateur berry, same as the Antwerp, Hornet, Orange, and other delicious fruits that do not generally succeed with field culture. Raspberries are local in their habits, many kinds do well in some sections where the soil and climate suit them, will not succeed in other localities, and it is safer to plant several varieties, and ascertain by trial which will do the best. I have recently observed a rust or fungus upon the Black Cap which, if not arrested, will soon make sad work with that variety. It appears to be similar to what is seen on the native wild blackberry and dewberry; it first makes its appearance on the under side of the leaves in form of a reddish incrustation, and when ripe is carried by the wind and insects to the surrounding bushes, which show the effects next year by sending up a number of small spindling shoots, which produce no fruit nor blossoms. Three years since it commenced on a five-acre lot of Doolittle raspberries, and has spread so rapidly that the whole of them are now nearly worthless and will be destroyed this Summer. I have another block of twenty acres of Doolittle's, which are yet green and healthy, if they should be attacked with the fungus they will be as completely ruined as the first lot. The disease seems to be as destructive in its march as the fire blight on pear trees or the yellows on peaches. Here is a subject deserving attention to ascertain the cause and find a remedy, or the Black-cap variety will become of but little value.

BLACKBERRIES.

Blackberries commence before raspberries are entirely gone, and for a short time we can enjoy both. Their cultivation was greatly augmented, three or four years since, by the introduction from New-Jersey of two of the most valuable varieties, viz., the Wilson's Early and Kittatiny, which will supersede all others in market, being much larger than Dorchester and sweeter than the New-Rochelle. Where convenient to market, they are very profitable, producing as many bushels per acre as corn, with less labor. They need but one scratching, and will continue in yield annually several hundred dollars per acre for many years. There are many new varieties being introduced, which will require much care and careful experiment to ascertain if they have any desirable qualities not possessed by others. I have purchased many at high prices, and after devoting years of close attention to their cultivation, found they had no merit worthy of note, and discarded them. The Missouri Mammoth was represented to grow as large as eggs. It has fruited quite well with me, producing berries of quite moderate size, as good as can be by the fruit-growers generally. The Sinclair, Holcomb, Mason's Mountain and Cumberland are about the same. Parker's Early, Brandywine, and Alabama are not worth growing. Idaho Climbing is nothing but the common wild dewberry. I have here a few bunches of the Lucretia, Dr. White and Dr. Warder, the latter a purple berry, novelties in their way, but of no practical value. It is quite expensive for each individual to be trying these experiments, and by associated action we might aid each other. If this Club would form a Committee to test, critically, nurse and condemn new fruits that are offered for sale possessing no new qualities of value, they might add more blame than praise for what they found to do, yet they could render great service to the community, in the results of careful and impartial experiments recorded and sent out from here would be highly esteemed by inquirers throughout the land.

After Mr. PARRY's address, the subject of small fruit was further discussed, when some speakers controverted certain suggestions made by Mr. PARRY, in regard to certain suggestions made by him on the excellence of some varieties of small fruits.

Inquiry was then made as to berry bushes without thorns. Mr. FULLER stated that we have thornless blackberries and thornless raspberry bushes; but the fruit does not equal the Kittatinny and Doolittle Black Cap.

Mr. E. WILLIAMS, of Montclair, was then introduced by the Chairman, who placed five large plates of ripe berries on the table. With him, on his soil, the Dorchester is the earliest and most satisfactory berry that he has grown. The Dorchester is about one week earlier than the Wilson. He thought the New-Rochelle has had its day. The Wilson does not succeed satisfactorily with him. He has seen the variety for sale productive in other localities than on his farm. The Kittatinny he could not recommend. It will always speak for itself. Mr. Williams also showed a plateful of the early Madeleine pear, which with him is a superior variety. Another plate was filled with the excellent variety called the Doyenne d'Ete. He showed some beautiful specimens of early apples, among which were the Red Astrachan, Early Harvest, Sweet Bough, the Duchess of Oldenburg and the Hawthornden. The fruits exhibited were all distributed among those present, tested, and their qualities compared. In planting blackberry bushes, he would put out his bushes six feet by eight. The first year he grained three stools to one cane. The second season he would allow two canes to each stool and every year thereafter. He would seldom allow more than two canes to each stool. He is now experimenting with stakes and wire trellises, which he thinks will allow the canes to decline each way from the centre, so that the young canes that spring up every season may grow in the middle of the stools. The pruning should always be done just at the right time. The old canes should not be allowed to stand as the fruit is gathered, in order to give the young and new canes an opportunity to attain their full growth before cold weather. Bushes with him require no Winter protection.

THOMAS CAVANAGH, of Brooklyn, Chairman of the Committee designated at a previous meeting, rendered a report on the fruits, in which they described the various specimens shown last week. The subject of employing newly-slacked lime as an excellent article for repelling insects, was discussed. A. S. FULLER spoke highly of lime, and stated that he makes use of powdered lime, dusted over growing plants, for destroying and repelling almost all kinds of noxious insects. Mr. DOTY had used lime on his ground with satisfactory results, except in certain instances. He applied lime to his growing cauliflower, and it seemed to injure them.

Mr. DOTY made inquiry as to the largest size of blackberry cultivated, for the purpose of determining the requisite size to make his pruner, which was alluded to last week in the Times. Messrs. PARRY, FULLER and others thought that the stalks would not exceed one inch in diameter. E. WILLIAMS said: I can show canes on my grounds over one and a quarter inches in diameter.

The Club then adjourned till next Thursday, when Mr. T. B. WAKEMAN will give an address.

The Canal Bridge in Third-avenue, Brooklyn.

The excitement among the residents and and property owners of South Brooklyn, which was evinced on Wednesday, was considerably intensified yesterday by the presence of a large body of laborers, who were at work on the excavation near Fourth-street for the new branch of the Gowanus Canal being constructed by the Brooklyn Improvement Company. This was the result of an injunction granted by Justice TAPPEN, of the Supreme Court, restraining the Mayor, Street Commissioner or other city authorities from interfering with the workmen in the prosecution of their work. That the reader may have a clear idea of what the Brooklyn Improvement Company are doing, which has caused so much commotion, a brief history of their enterprise is appended.

A law passed the last Legislature which closed a number of streets on the map of the Gowanus District, and authorized the Brooklyn Improvement Company, consisting of R. C. LUYSTER and other capitalists and land-owners of that part of the city, to convert into docks a portion of the swamp land, which it was hopeless to expect could ever be filled up to the street grades, or rendered fit for business. By virtue of the power, thus obtained, the Company have been for some time engaged in cutting a branch canal, a hundred feet wide, from the Gowanus Canal at a point three hundred feet below the Third-street bridge, and running it up through that block to Fourth-street, and parallel with Third-street, for a distance of four hundred feet toward Third-avenue, on point where the great excavation is being made over which Mr. LITCHFIELD says the Company will erect a stationary (not a draw) bridge. Among the benefical effects of this enterprise may be noted the following: That it will help to drain the swamps, and that it will make all the blocks between Third-street and Sixth-street and between Third-avenue and the canal valuable wharf property, because of sale facilities. The branch canal is to be piled and decked its whole extent, and the amount of mercantile shipping bound to be done upon it and upon the Gowanus Canal proper, when thoroughly deepened, will add enormously to the taxable value and the business profits of the city. This great work, in connection with the other magnificent and gigantic enterprises now going on in South Brooklyn, immediately adjacent to the canal and along the water front on the Bay, from the Erie basin almost to Bay Ridge, will do much to fulfil the destiny of Brooklyn as a commercial seat and as a place of residence. South Brooklyn is giving place to manufacturing interests very rapidly, and the shipping interests are keeping pace, hence the branch canal of the Brooklyn Improvement Company.

Coroners' Cases.

CATHERINE RYAN, a native of Ireland, aged 40 years, died suddenly yesterday at No. 87 Baxter-street. Coroner KELLER held an inquest, and the jury rendered a verdict of death from intemperance.

Coroner ROLLINS was notified yesterday to hold an inquest at Bellevue Hospital over the remains of JOHN GRAHAM, who died from the effects of injuries mentioned on the 24th of May last. The deceased was a gas-fitter, and while at work at the corner of Second-avenue and Forty-second-street fell through a hatchway and fractured his spine.

The remains of an unknown man were yesterday found floating near the Harlem River, near One Hundred and Fourteenth-street, being subsequently removed to the Morgue for inquest and identification.

Coroner ROLLINS held an inquest yesterday over the body of Mrs. CATHARINE BOGERS, who died at No. 209 West Twenty-sixth-street from the effects of burning received by the explosion of a kerosine oil can while pouring the fluid over a fire. A verdict of accidental death was rendered.

The City Mission.

The City Mission held its monthly meeting on Wednesday, Vice-President A. R. WETMORE in the Chair. From the statistics of the month's labors it appears that there have been employed thirty-eight missionaries, who have made 20,311 missionary visits, on nine a-day for each missionary, and distributed 2,236 and 100,000 tracts to the poor. There exists in this Mission eleven churches, eight Sabbath Schools, one reading-room, holding 300 meetings and twelve open air services. The Mission has relieved 186 families or 450 persons, at an expense of $4,000 for the month.

Murderous Attack Upon an Assassin.

About 1 o'clock yesterday morning JAMES McCLELLAN, who resides in First-avenue, near Twenty-fifth-street, when returning home from a picnic at Union Park, was attacked by a gang of rowdies, and in the affray received a shot in the thigh, and was badly beaten about the head with a stage-slat. All the assailants escaped, and the wounded man was taken home by his friends.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—EASTERN DISTRICT.

Judge NELSON has sent down his opinion in the following important case, heard before him:

BANKRUPTCY—STAYING PROCEEDINGS IN A STATE COURT.

In the Matter of the New-York Revenue Oil Company.—BELKNAP, C. J.—This is a motion for a review of an order of the District Court, setting aside a judgment of bankruptcy against some Oil Company was adjudged and declared a bankrupt on the 10th day of June, last, Charles Louis, the defendant, was appointed their assignee. At the same time the New-York Bonanza Oil Company, indebted to him by said a mortgage against the bankrupt corporation, which, it claimed, was a lien on a part of the assets; that on the 2d day of October following, commenced a suit in the Supreme Court of the State of New-York, and mortgage, making, among others, the assignee in bankruptcy one of the defendants. The amount claimed by the mortgage was $100,000. On the 20th of October, last, the assignee presented a petition to the District Court, alleging, among other things, the invalidity of the mortgage and praying that it be declared void, and that the property be sold free of the lien of the said mortgage, and the mortgaged premises be sold and the proceeds brought into Court and disposed of according to the rights of parties, and that a perpetual injunction issue out of the said Court, restraining the Guaranty and Indemnity Company, their officers or agents, from taking any further proceedings in the foreclosure suit in the State Court, and that all the defendants were required to answer the petition. The defendants claim that the District Court has no jurisdiction over the foreclosure suit in the Supreme Court, and that the petition does not set forth a cause of action, and further, that if the Court has jurisdiction in the premises, that it ought not to exercise it, but should, by its decree, direct the parties to have their rights adjudicated in the State Court. We have heard, by bill and petition, the parties upon the merits, and upon the question of jurisdiction, and we are inclined to think that the District Court has jurisdiction in the case under the provisions of the Bankrupt Act, which provides that the jurisdiction shall extend to all controversies between the bankrupt and any creditor or creditors, and the determination of the question of allowance and disallowance of the claims of the respective creditors thereon," that is, on the assets, and "to the adjustment of varying claims and conflicting interests of all parties." In the present case, the proceedings were begun in the Supreme Court of the State, after the Kerosene Oil Company had been declared a bankrupt and an assignee of the assets had been made. Whether or not it would be otherwise as to the Court of the State with a lien pending in the State Court at the time of the adjudication, we do not intend to determine in this case. But we are of opinion that the proceedings in the Supreme Court against the bankrupt (Kerosene Oil Company) should have been by bill in equity, and, as a matter of internal and statutory way. The second section of the act provides that the Circuit Courts shall have and exercise jurisdiction with the District Courts of all suits at law or in equity, which may be brought by the assignee in bankruptcy against any person claiming an adverse interest, or by such person against the assignee, touching any property or rights of property of the bankrupt, &c., but limits the suits of that they must be brought in the District Court, and the time the cause of action accrued for, or against the assignee.

The sixth section gives an appeal from the decision of the District Court to the Circuit Court in equity in cases where the debt or duty to the amount or value of $500 is disputed, claimed to be now, then and there. The results of the section applies principally to the case of a creditor or creditors, claiming a debt against the bankrupt proceeds reported in the course of the bankruptcy proceedings, and has no application to the present case, as the Guaranty and Indemnity Company have not appeared as a creditor therein. The ninth section allows an appeal, or writ of error from the Circuit to the Supreme Court, where the matter in dispute exceeds $2,000. Now, under the provisions of the act and the concurrent jurisdiction there conferred, the proceeding might have been instituted in the Circuit Court. It is a proceeding by the assignee against parties claiming an adverse interest in the property, and, in a sense, to settle the question as to the time when, and by what process the Court should, in such case, take jurisdiction, and if so, we think the proceeding should be in the nature of a bill in equity. It is by no means clear that an appeal would lie from a decree of the United States Court to the Circuit Court under the eighth section, in the summary proceedings in the present case. We shall, of course, assume that the proceeding of the assignee to the District Court, and filed as a bill in equity, and that in asking a decree of the Court against the rights of the defendants, they stand on answer within and according to the rules and practice of the Court, and that all the parties to the suit in the Supreme Court by and Indemnity Company, their officers and agents, in the foreclosure suit in the State Court, and that all orders and proceedings in the State Court inconsistent with the order herein to be vacated and set aside.

But the assignee, R. P. Tracy, for the Guaranty and Indemnity Company, Barney, Butler and Parsons.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—SOUTHERN DISTRICT.

Before Judge Blatchford.

BANKRUPTCY REPORT.

In the matter of Frederick W. Bound, a Bankrupt.—BLATCHFORD, J.—The 3rd specification, in so far as it charges that since the passing of the Bankruptcy act, the bankrupt being a workingman within the meaning of the act, he has been guilty of an act of bankruptcy in contempt of the process issued by the order of a Bankruptcy in contempt, at the time of the issuing of such order, is equivalent to an allegation that the bankrupt, being a workingman, has not, subsequently to the time of the said act, been guilty of any act of bankruptcy, the case in, therefore, of the order, which, under section 39, a discharge cannot be granted.

S. J. Crooks for the bankrupt; J. F. Roberts for the creditor.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE.

Before Commissioner Shields.

THE DOCKET DISTILLERY CASE.

The examination of John and James Rooney, charged with a conspiracy to defraud Government of Internal Revenue, in the matter of the distillery in West-Fifty-second-street, was concluded yesterday. James H. Rogers, one of the witnesses for the defense, testified that he had been employed for the eight months, and that it would be impossible for the defendants, in the person of Rooney, to be an agent such as they, and in their place. John Cassidy, and other witnesses, testified to the same effect, and other testimony in favor of the defendants. It was subsequently decided by the Commissioner that there were no grounds for holding them, and they were accordingly discharged.

Jefferson Market—Judge Justice.

ALLEGED FRAUDULENT FRACTIONS.

Henry F. Sturges, who is now at the Tremont House, Broadway, made a complaint on the 24th inst. stating that he was approached by George B. Nash with proposals for a partnership management, Sturges was then a stranger in New-York, and Nash declared that he had just received a lease of the Lafayette Hotel, and could be made there. Nash further declared that he would be made there. Nash further declared that he owed no money, and that he had taken out of the hotel every cent, and that he was entirely free from all debts and liabilities whatever. Sturges believing the representations made, entered into partnership with Nash, and advanced large sums of money, but subsequently he discovered that Nash was a "common cheat and fraud, and that all his representations were false and intended to defraud Sturges. Nash, who arrested on the complaint, and being arraigned yesterday, was held for examination.

REFERRED WITH.

She was arraigned on a charge of grand larceny, and was required to give bail for trial.

Police Justice—Mansfield, Justice.

THURSDAY, July 29—P. M.

The official figures of the Foreign Trade of the United States for ten months of the late Fiscal Year reflect the very important extent to which United States 5-20s and other American Stocks have been used in settlement of foreign balances. Not only is the apparent balance of trade against the United States larger than usual, but the demand for Specie in settlement is less by nearly thirty millions of dollars than for the corresponding ten months last year, and the difference will be found much greater when the tables to the 30th June are made up for the whole Fiscal Year. The remaining apparent balance, over seventy millions in amount, (Gold values,) must have absorbed from $75,000,000 to $80,000,000 United States and other American Stocks to the 30th April last, and the lightness of the export demand for Gold since that time would indicate that the process of absorption is still going on.

Of course this operation is looked upon by many prudent business people with deep concern for the future of our Foreign Exchanges. But after all it has compensating advantages. The Foreign Capital thus invested in our Stocks is not wholly eaten up or worn out in the process of exchanging these Stocks for Foreign Merchandise. The Metals and other material which we import, and which in the aggregate figure to a very large share of the general total of the year, in the shape of Railway Iron, Pig and Bar Iron, Steel, Copper, Tin, and a score of other articles which enter into the permanent material improvement of the country, such as new Railways, Mills, Factories, Machinery, Roofings, constitute a substantial and profitable exchange. Independent of all this, the heavy importations of other Foreign Merchandise, which may be said to perish in the using, administer to the comfort and convenience, and, to a large extent, to the ordinary necessities of the people, besides contributing amply and unfailingly to the Customs Revenues, which are the base and support of the Public Credit. That all this Foreign Merchandise has not been bought and consumed without the ability, growing out of the prosperous condition of the country, to honestly pay for what we consume in one shape or another, is quite certain, and the whole question of our foreign balances is reduced to a division between the Specie remitted, (and which could have been spared in much larger sums,) and the United States 5-20s and other American Stocks, exchanged in place of Specie, and which, in exchanging, opened the way to the employment of a corresponding amount of American capital, for some years locked up in the Public Funds, in new channels of enterprise and improvement.

The Treasury Office purchased to-day, $2,000,000 United States 5-20s for the Sinking Fund, as follows:

E. Sweet & Co.	115,000	at 120.25
Frank & Cone	71,000	at 120.15
Total	$1,826,000

The Bonds purchased were divided as follows:

1862	$461,000	1867	$44,000
1864	125,000	1868	65,000
1865	225,000
Total			$1,000,000

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The Pairie states that the political reforms soon to be proposed to the Senate will be more liberal than the Emperor's message to the Corps Legislatif intimated. Among other changes, it is thought that the sittings of the Senate will be made public.

The London Times of yesterday commented upon "The Chinese Question in the United States." It concluded that "inheriting an ancient civilization and perfect economic methods, but destitute of the strength and toughness of moral fibre which support authority, the Chinese may be welcomed as assistants in colonization, not feared as a race likely to dominate in the future."

A Liverpool dispatch reports that an unknown man committed suicide by throwing himself under a passing railroad train, at Crewe, an important railroad centre, about thirty-four miles from Liverpool; and that on his body was found a "number of securities of various kinds, part of the proceeds of the Ocean National Bank robbery at New-York."

The Jews of Russia have formally petitioned the Czar for an extension of their religious and educational rights.

GENERAL.

Dispatches are received from Rear-Admiral ROWAN, commanding the Asiatic Squadron, dated Yokohama, June 26. He reports that the Japanese have far outstripped the Chinese in progress toward Western civilization. The Government troops are uniformed and armed with the latest improved breech-loading guns; the ships of war are well armed; a hospital in charge of an American and open to foreigners has just been established; light-houses have been built, and the coal mines are successfully worked. The Parliament was still in session, and many important measures, mostly relating to foreigners, foreign intercourse and finance, were under consideration. A visit early in August was expected from the Duke of EDINBURGH.

President GRANT returned to Washington yesterday morning, accompanied by his Private Secretary, General FORNEY, and Secretary FISH. A special Cabinet meeting was held at the Executive Mansion. All the members were present excepting Postmaster-General CRESWELL. The President will return to Long Branch to-day.

It is charged that the murderer of Mrs. ORMSBY, the widow who was shot dead while standing at her chamber window at Springfield, Ohio, on the night of the 14th of July, is one FRANK ORMSBY, her step-son, a young man about 22 years of age. A fierce wrangle had occurred between the two over the division of the property of Mr. ORMSBY, Sr., after his death, which took place about eighteen months ago. By some means Mrs. ORMSBY gained some slight advantage over her step-son, and he left home, swearing that he would avenge the wrongs which he felt he had suffered at her hands. He was not seen in that part of the State again until the day of the murder, and has not been seen since. It is supposed that he is in the vicinity and sheltered by some of his relatives.

The Massachusetts "Eighth Regiment Association" holds its annual meeting and reunion at Indian Hill Farm, Newburyport, on Monday next. General BUTLER, who commanded the regiment when it occupied Annapolis, and opened communication between Washington City and the loyal North in 1861, will be present and make the principal address at the afternoon open-air meeting.

A young girl named CAROLINE KETCHUM, 17 years old, was stabbed three times in the City Park, New-Orleans, on Saturday, by her seducer, one SALVADOR CARLOTTI, because she threatened to prevent him from marrying another. He consented to spare her further wounds when she had sworn never to tell who had stabbed her; and leaving her to die he hurried away. The girl managed to drag herself to a police station, where her wounds were pronounced mortal. She was removed to a hospital; there, to repeated solicitations, she refused to reveal the name of her assassin, and thus break her oath, but in her delirium disclosed it. Search was made, but at last accounts the murderer had not been captured, though his blood-sprinkled clothes were found at his residence.

The Attorney-General has rendered an opinion that all the exemptions to members of the National Guard, in the laws of 1867, still exist in full force, being unrepealed.

It is reported that a slight earthquake shock, accompanied by a brilliant light, was felt in the town of Whitehall, this State, at about 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning.

One THOMAS L. HOPKINS, foreman of a rolling-mill in Syracuse, has been arrested on a charge of having employed a man to fire the barn of a resident of Camillus, named FARNUM, several years ago. The arrest was made on a warrant sworn out by JOHN E. SEAR, on account of whose alleged larceny during his incarceration in Auburn Prison has been published. It is stated that a civil suit has also been commenced in behalf of the insurance company interested, against HOPKINS, to recover the value of the property destroyed.

It is stated on the authority of the attorney of Miss AMANDA CRAIG, of the Sprague-Craig breach of promise case fame, that the statement recently made to the effect that Mr. SPRAGUE had taken out an appeal to the Supreme Court, is wrong. Mr. SPRAGUE has taken out a writ of error on questions of law; it is now too late to take an appeal. The execution is now in the hands of the Sheriff, and the parties are at liberty to proceed to collect the judgment of $10,000 and costs, as if no writ of error had been used.

A serious fight occurred on board the steamer Dubuque yesterday, at Hampton, on the Mississippi, a few miles above Rock Island. It was begun by a number of raftsmen from Rock Island, who were enraged because they were not allowed to occupy the cabin. The passengers as well as the crew were drawn in. Eight men are reported killed. The Sheriff of Rock Island, being telegraphed for, came down with a large force of Police, and succeeded in restoring order.

The two refractory Cuban filibusters who would not accept the Government terms offered at the recent general liberation of prisoners at Fort Lafayette, have been relieved from their captivity, having withdrawn from their stubborn position. They were released on giving a recognizance which requires them to strictly observe the Neutrality laws.

THOMAS KELLY, one of the boys injured by the explosion of fireworks in Printing-House-square, Wednesday night, died yesterday. RICHARD MULGAHEY, who was terribly burned, lies in a critical condition at the New-York Hospital, and it is a question whether MICHAEL BARRETT, whose eyes were destroyed, and who received other severe injuries, will recover. The rest of the wounded are doing well.

The Maryland Club, from Baltimore, arrived in this City yesterday, on a base-ball tour, and played in the afternoon with the Eckfords, at the Union Ground, in Brooklyn. The latter won by a score of 24 to 4.

The strike of the tailors employed in the "shop" department in this City seems to be gaining strength. There are now 1,500 men engaged in the movement. A few firms have acceded to their demands for increased wages.

GEO. A. ABBOTT, who was recently arrested in this City on a charge of forging certificates of railroad stock, appears to have entered into the business very largely. Fresh charges have been brought against him since his arrest. He is held for trial.

In the case of MATTHEW CAMPBELL, on trial in the Court of Oyer and Terminer for the "First Ward murder," the summing up of counsel on both sides was concluded yesterday. The Court will charge the jury and submit the case to them to-day.

Capt. KIRK, of Hamburg steamship Germania, will accept our thanks for late Continental papers.

The number of head cattle received at all the yards during the past week is 6,905; cows, 150; calves, 2,772; sheep and lambs, 29,008; swine, 22,202. Prices of cattle remain unchanged from the quotations of last Tuesday. Common cattle are moderate at 14c.@14½c. ℔ lb. Some of the best lots were sold at 15c.@15½c. ℔ lb.; extras, 16c. Large numbers of Texas cattle and thin State steers were not sold. Sheep are fairly active at 5½c.@7c. ℔ lb. for good sheep. Selected lots will bring more than 7c. Lambs are easy at 8½c.@10c. ℔ lb., live weight. Prime hogs, dressed, are rather firm at 12½c., with selected lots at 13½c. ℔ lb. But little is done in live hogs.

The Great Want.

The discussion of the needs and duties of the Republican Party, here and throughout the State, is eliciting much useful thought. It is quite evident from the expressions of opinion which we from day to day reproduce, that the causes of party demoralization and defeat in this City are at length understood, and that the necessity of reorganization begins to be appreciated by those who alone have power to effect it. The Republican Party in New-York will receive a fresh impetus from the moment when the City shall be freed from the domination of the present committees; and this reform will not be effected until our country friends take matters into their own hands, and organize with a view to the success of great principles rather than the continued authority of unscrupulous men.

"What we want, as a party, above everything else, both in the City and the country," remarks the Newburg Journal, "is a little more honesty among leaders and toleration everywhere." The truth could not be more tersely stated. The party in this City has been run in the interest of combinations of individuals, who, by sheer impudence and pertinacity, have secured from successive conventions an indorsement of their pretensions. Of bona fide title to leadership they have not a particle. Neither by ability nor character, neither by services nor by the possession of popular respect, are they justified in claiming the prominent positions they have held. By persistent bullying and intriguing, however, they have contrived, year after year, to be intrusted with the party management, and this power they have used for corrupt personal purposes. The welfare of the party has not entered into their calculations. The effect of their action upon the reputable members of the party and upon the popular vote, they have not cared to consider. It has been enough that, invested with the symbols of party authority, they have carried on a system of bargain and sale; so that while the City Republican vote has steadily declined, their opportunities for carrying on the traffic in offices and plunder have continued undiminished.

Now, the ability of these schemers and jobbers to manipulate conventions and promote their own ends has been in good part derived from the prevalence of an intolerant spirit. They have profited by an inclination to judge harshly of the motives and conduct of every man, who saw passing questions from some other angle of vision than their own. The possibility of reconciling varying shades of opinion with fidelity to the same governing standard of right and duty, they studiously ignored. There were differences, and all who differed with them were wrong—not simply wrong as a matter of speculation or judgment, but wrong in principle and aim. A fashion at once so unfortunate and unjust had been impossible but for the excitement of the war period. Nothing, however, could have been more favorable to the game of worthless aspirants for leadership, who, by constantly acting on HORACE TOOKE's definition of orthodoxy, contrived to fix the stigma of heresy on every Republican who refused to do homage to their pretensions. Thus the terms "radical" and "conservative," in themselves harmless, were made to signify adherence or opposition—not to the principles or policy of the Republican Party, but—to the pretensions of the ruling ring.

The Newburg Journal, therefore, is right. The great want of the party, aside from the practical details of local organization, is "a little more honesty among leaders, and toleration everywhere." And there must be greater toleration or the best guarantee of greater honesty will be wanting. The latter will be possible only when the intelligence and character of the whole party are made available; and these will not be available until the impudent wire-pullers who would constitute their beheests the dogmas of the party, to be implicitly accepted and obeyed, without reference to their bearing upon the principles and fortunes of the party, are formally deposed. We have seen in this City the most trustworthy Republicans branded as enemies, and their excommunication demanded, simply because they refused compliance with the sinister requirements of ward politicians, who care nothing for the party except as an agency for distributing offices. And the evil will again and again recur until good sense overcomes knavery, and Republicans are judged by their relation to the understood principles and the legitimate objects of the party—not by the praise or censure of those who at this moment have the management of its organization in this City.

The time is propitious for a change which is essential to the usefulness of the party here. With the completion of reconstruction, the causes of many troubles will disappear. The nomination of GRANT made Republicans a unit on national questions, and the happy progress of the policy he was elected to execute is an assurance of its continued harmony. Events have obliterated all that was real in the distinction between "radical" and "conservative." Controversies which once divided them have culminated in measures that are satisfactory to all. Prevailing habits of thought and expression have experienced a corresponding improvement. The toleration that is required locally, already reigns on national topics. For the first time since the war, the main body of the Republican Press is laboring to achieve sectional reconciliation by the cultivation of a just and magnanimous spirit. Among newspapers, the bigots and proscriptionists are a feeble minority. The great majority, who have accepted the result in Virginia as satisfactory and are prepared to welcome similar results in Mississippi and Texas, are now disposed to cultivate the most liberal relations. Toleration in the largest sense promises to be in the ascendent.

The introduction of the same spirit into the organization of the party in this City and State will contribute largely to its success and usefulness in local affairs.

The Carlist Fiasco.

The so-called Carlist "insurrection" seems to have been a very short-lived affair. The Government was able to put down all overt demonstrations with ease, and Don CARLOS himself is said to have "ordered a cessation" of the movement on his behalf, which would probably have occurred without his taking the trouble to "order" it, and the Carlists are in consequence much "discouraged," just as Artemus Ward is said to have been when surrounded by hostile Indians with their scalping-knives in their hands. The unfortunate people who were induced by Carlist agents to take up arms are already disgusted, and loudly complain that they have been deceived by Carlist agents. The movement, hopeless from the first, may now be regarded as virtually extinguished, and Don CARLOS must now finally abandon all hope of attaining the throne. Beyond personal attachment and local traditions in certain comparatively insignificant sections of country, he has never had any real basis of support in Spain. One complication in Spanish affairs is now fairly removed, and the dangers by which she is threatened lessened in a corresponding degree.

One cannot, however, quite get rid of the suspicion that PRIM, for some motives of his own, may have been inclined to make the most of this Carlist affair, just as he has unquestionably exaggerated the importance of the isolated and ill-advised Republican outbreaks, in order to make them a pretext for the acquisition of additional arbitrary power for the Government, and for exercising it with greater severity. Without professing to understand what his actual intentions may be, or how far he is sincere in his disclaimers of personal ambition, it is evident that the policy of the existing Government is simply to strengthen its own hands, and to maintain the present state of affairs as long as possible without enunciating any definite programme for the future. It is doubtless a great temptation to him, by playing off Carlists and Republicans against one another, and by exciting popular alarm with regard to the alleged designs of each, to gain greater executive strength, but he must remember that just in proportion as the Government acquires power, so much the greater is the responsibility that rests upon him to use it for the benefit of the country, the conciliation of all reasonably moderate parties, and the bringing about of a permanent and satisfactory settlement of affairs.

Conflict of Jurisdiction Between Bankruptcy and State Courts.

Our legal columns this morning contain a decision which will be of interest to all parties who have anything to do with the Bankruptcy act, involving, as it does, the right of the Bankruptcy Court to stay proceedings that are pending in a State Court. The bankrupt in this case was the Kerosene Oil Company, which was adjudged bankrupt about a year ago. The New-York Guaranty and Indemnity Company held a mortgage upon the real estate of the bankrupt for $100,000, and in October, 1868, they commenced a suit in the Supreme Court of the State to foreclose it. The assignee in bankruptcy desired to contest the validity of this mortgage, and each party naturally wished to have that contest carried on on his own ground. The assignee therefore applied to the Bankruptcy Court, on a petition setting up the facts, for an order directing the Guaranty and Indemnity Company to stop proceedings in their suit in the State Court. They, on the other hand, claimed that the Bankruptcy Court had no jurisdiction to stay proceedings in a State Court, appealing to the provision in the Judiciary act, which expressly forbids the issuing of an injunction for that purpose.

The District Court, however, considered that jurisdiction was given to it by the Bankruptcy act, and made the order for a stay of proceedings. The Guaranty and Indemnity Company then applied to the Circuit Court to review and reverse this order, and it is the decision of Judge NELSON on that application which we publish this morning. As will be seen, the decision of the District Court is sustained on this question of jurisdiction, but is modified on a question of practice.

So far as we know, this is the first decision of a Circuit Court upon this question, and there were conflicting decisions in reference to it in the District Courts. The question is one of importance and interest. It is one which occasioned a serious contest under the former Bankruptcy act, and which must in some way be carried to the Supreme Court for decision under the present Bankruptcy act, as it was under the former one. In the meantime, like other questions which concern the limits of State and Federal jurisdiction, it has elements in it which call for patient and careful treatment by all parties concerned to avoid serious difficulty.

The Alarm in Canada.

The Canadian scare this year seems to be quite as baseless, so far as we can judge, as that of the last season; but, indeed, a Fenian fright has come to be a regular annual sensation with our neighbors across the border, and it does not require much shaple of fact to go upon for an imaginative or reckless newsmonger to produce an excitement in that invasion-dreading community. Nor do we say this in any spirit of ridicule. On the contrary, the geographical situation of Canada on the one hand, and the known recklessness of the Fenians on the other, may well produce a constant flutter of anxiety, if not of fear, in those peaceful Canadian cities and settlements which, as they lie closest to the border, would bear the brunt of a sortie from our territory. Mutato nomine, or, rather mutatis loco, with our positions reversed, the story might be told of us; let us but "put ourselves in their place" and we should probably be in the same trepidation.

As a matter of fact, however, the present is probably a "needless alarm." There is no indication whatever of any formidable Fenian design on Canada, and, on the other hand, it is easy to trace the source from which rumor may have concocted one. These Midsummer days are those of gregarious enjoyment, of society festivals, of picnics, anniversaries, club celebrations, and what not, in which, of course, the remnants of the Fenian organization, and the old Brotherhoods of the Irish Republic take their part. Naturally much is said of the past glories of Fort Erie, and of the Fenian movements of three years ago; and much patriotism and much invading zeal is for the moment revived. But, so far as formal preparation for a campaign is concerned, nothing of the kind has been noted.

Besides, the Irish situation has changed since 1866. Then, there was a revolution in Ireland, to which the American movement was auxiliary, while now "all is quiet on the Liffey." Then, the Irish question was one of peasantry against constabulary, of blows, imprisonments, and fighting; now it has taken the shape of legislation, and when we talk of it or write of it, our thoughts are fixed on what is doing in London, not in Limerick. The movement on Canada in 1866 was not a mere reckless piece of filibusterism, but was designed as a flank attack to aid the cause of the "Irish Republic" in Ireland itself; and the stimulus has subsided now. We admit that Fenian movements are not always dependent on reason or on probabilities of success; that they are often so eccentric and seemingly causeless that it is unsafe to measure them by ordinary standards; and, in any case, as we have already said, the Canadians are right in taking precautions, for "the burnt child dreads the fire." But the frenzy of Fenianism is gone; its wondrous enthusiasm wondrously escaped by being drawn off as it were, through the safety-pipe, instead of being stored up and used behind the engine. The rival Kilkenny factions did much to use up against each other the spirit of their followers; the strife of the Head Centres exhausted much of the zeal of the rank and file. It would not now be possible, without some fresh immediate cause, to revive the crusading spirit of 1865 and 1866.

However, all these little excitements serve at least to prevent the Canadians from reposing in undue security. We have sometimes fancied the Government was not ill-pleased to hear these canards of invasion. More than once, Great Britain has made ready to withdraw her protecting arm, leaving the Dominion to its own military devices. Whatever, therefore, tends to keep up the drill and discipline of the volunteers and local militia is not an unmixed evil.

The Strike of the Tailors.

About two thousand of the twenty-eight hundred tailors who belong to the Trades Unions of this City, are on a strike for a general advance of about 40 per cent. in wages. We announced in April last, that preparations were then making for strikes during the Summer among tailors, barbers, shoemakers and others, for higher wages and less hours work; and it is not improbable that other and more serious strikes, largely affecting our manufacturing interests, may shortly follow the one just inaugurated.

How far the present strike of the tailors is justifiable remains to be seen. At first glance, on reading the expositions of the condition of the laborers, it would seem that the strikers were fully in the right; but the representations of the employers have not yet been heard. With the exception of cutters, none of the men employed as clothiers receive what would be considered in the present state of living adequate wages. The best of journeymen tailors with great difficulty make more than fifteen dollars per week. This is partly owing to the fact that large numbers of women underbid the men, and work at half rates, but it is more particularly owing to the fact that the tailors have not heretofore had a strong protective union like those which make bricklayers and carpenters independent and able to dictate their terms and hours to employers. The latter weakness, we learn, has been in some degree remedied. The unions have largely increased in the numbers of the members and the amount of domestic and the tailors enter upon the strike with a better organization than they have ever before had.

This is a fact to which the employers will be wise to give proper estimation. The strikers are undoubtedly well prepared for the struggle, having a complete organization, a large fund, and, as is always the case in such matters, the sympathy of the public, which never stops to consider either the justice or policy of a strike. How far the condition of the clothing trade will justify an accession to the demands of the journeymen, we do not know, but our impression is that at this present time and season of the year it is not at all favorable. This is a consideration to which the strikers ought to give its fullest value, for on the proper estimate of the trade difficulties surrounding the employers depends the solution of their own difficulties of wages. A wise policy suggests at the very outset of the strike the fullest consultation—not of employers with each other, and unions with other unions—but of employers and strikers, and the proper consideration of the conditions of both trade and wages.

Are Wrongs Allies.

Are Republics ungrateful? Do we properly acknowledge our public benefactors? Or, if we pay them becoming honors for a moment, is our gratitude as lasting as their beneficence? And, again, is this acknowledgment impartial, including in its scope "both man and bird and beast?" A few years ago the streets of New-York and Brooklyn—especially Brooklyn—were infested with bugs and worms that riddled all the vegetation, hung in great festoons from the trees, swung in the air on every side, drove the whole population from what was once the cool and comfortable shade, making the sunny side of the street the refuge of the pedestrian, and the parks no longer pleasure resorts but nuisances. People were always dodging these pests in walking; in the cars they picked them from each others' bonnets, in church from each others' backs. It was like a plague of Egypt, and people cried out for a Moses. The little European house-sparrow undertook that rôle, and was successively introduced into Union Park, into Central Park, and so on to all other open spaces, to Brooklyn, to Jersey City, to Boston, to Havana itself, and everywhere its enemy and ours vanished before it. The difference in enjoyment between a Summer in New-York now and three years ago is very great—which difference of comfort must be laid to the account of our faithful little ally. Sparrows are now in this country by the thousand, and not only are scavengers of cities, and keepers of parks, not only do they make streets habitable and shade trees grateful, but they are worth their weight in gold to fruit growers in the country round about. The only sufferers, indeed, by their domestication here, are the comic papers, which used to be full of woodcuts describing the old discomforts—Adolphus making love to Angelina, with a pair of the banished enemies hanging to the waxed ends of his moustache, she wearing a cluster of them en chignon, and so on. All that resource is closed now for the humorous artists. But to the original question—are we ungrateful to our feathered friends? Not so, as one who walks these afternoons through Central Park will see, observing the palaces we have built for them, or who ever glances, of a morning, at their original settlement in Union Park—the Jamestown, so to speak, of these little colonists—and notes the hotels we have provided for our winged allies, while a steady old policeman is posted as faithful guardian of their rights and interests below.

MINOR TOPICS.

It is quite likely that there is truth in the report that President GRANT and Secretary BOUTWELL are at "loggerheads" about the action of the latter in regard to the Southern elections. In Virginia the Secretary opposed the Walker Party, which claimed to be the special representative of GRANT's policy. In Tennessee, he has taken an active part against the Senter Party, which takes its stand on the Administration or Chicago platform. In Mississippi, he has taken ground against the Dent Party, which declares its acceptance of Republican principles, measures and policy throughout. The President himself has not attempted interference in any way with the course of the elections; and it would not be surprising if he were unable to justify the action of his Secretary regarding them.

The "drummers" for the business houses of this City are returning from the Western States with dismal accounts of the condition of trade. Orders cannot be obtained, neither in the dry goods line, nor in the whisky line, or in any other line; and even the sharpest and most energetic drummers have been unable to "make their expenses" in their attempts to secure orders in the West. They will have better times after the heat is moderated, and in the meantime they should go off roistering.

The French Emperor might have accepted a toast, and taken the trouble to reply to the suggestion made to him by President GRANT in the interchange of congratulatory messages by the French cable. GRANT expressed a hope that the liberal policy of our Government in permitting the cable to land on our shores would be reciprocated by France—that is to say, GRANT hoped that an American cable would be allowed to land in France as freely as the French cable had been allowed to land here. NAPOLEON must have understood this hint, and he ought to have seen the propriety of sending a prompt and liberal reply. But why was no reply sent by the Emperor?

The election of General ALEXANDER WEBB as President of the City College is regarded with great satisfaction by the old friends of the institution, as well as by those who have been laboring for the introduction of changes and reforms into its system. We have no doubt that President WEBB will infuse a new vitality into the College for the people, and keep it fully up with the most advanced views of education.

If women were to wear the same dress as men—that is, if they were to wear coat, vest and trowsers, with long-legged boots and stove-pipe hats—they would be able to command the same pay as men for their labor at all industrial pursuits, trades and professions. This is Mrs. STANTON's new idea. Now, the thing is very easily tried, and if any respectable number of women wish to try it we venture to say the police will not interfere. If inequality of pay is owing to difference of costume, then the female workers have the remedy in their own hands. We would be willing to see the experiment tried.

Instead of being surprised at the fact that 112 members of the British Parliament have voted against the abolition of capital punishment, we are really surprised that 41 members voted for its abolition. During the last half century England has greatly reduced the number of crimes for which death is the penalty, and the number of executions has during the time grown much smaller. We do not believe, however, that there is any likelihood of the entire abolition of capital punishment there.

We hope the Czar will accede to the request of the Jews of Russia for an extension of their rights of worship and education. The Czar need have no fear of the Jews. In this country, for example, they have the same rights as other people, and are regarded as excellent citizens.

If there be no reason why Judge DENT's relationship to President GRANT should secure his election as Governor of Mississippi, neither is there any reason why the fact of his relationship should be urged as a ground for his defeat. Judge DENT, as a candidate, should stand on his personal merits and political principles, while his family relations should be brought forward neither to injure him nor to help him.

That great New-York nuisance of Hell Gate is likely to be sent after so many others abated and dissolved within the last few years. Mr. R. G. MARTIN brings one more plan of disruption, in the shape of a double cylinder, which, with its piles, grapples and out-waters, looks formidable enough to be effective in some way. If it can make that cylindric well to the bottom, for the bottom to work in, Pot Rock must "leave that place," like those birds BRIGHAM SHERIDAN shot at. At the same time we have the original MAILLEFERT coming to try again; and so, with six Richmonds on that field, we may reasonably expect to see some result—in spite of that old proverb about the "cooks."

The Board of Health is slow, or seems slow; but backed, or forwarded, by the editorial of the Press—to say nothing of the Court of Appeals—it still moves, and makes a sure amount of headway. The nuisances are giving way, though they certainly die hard. It was as hard to drive the pigs out of New-York as to expel the frogs from Rome. But they were got rid of—the pigs—and other things went, after them, more recently. The rendezvous are now on their last legs, and will be gone after the first of October. New-York and time are too much for any two nuisances; and we should not wonder if these two markets on Fulton-street were to have some uneasy forebodings in regard to the next movement of sanitary progress.

An old poet whose name we Americans may quote with propriety—Lord STERLING—says that "Even to be happy is a dangerous thing;" and the columns of our public journals prove the truth of this, nearly every day, by their accounts of the disasters that accompany pleasure excursions. On these occasions people get so very happy that scarcely a pleasure party can take place without some accident. There are no peoples in the world—not even the "Gay Franks" or "furious Huns"—that enjoy themselves with such reckleessness as ours. We take fireworks to a fête champetre, and the boys blow them all up coming home. Our gala days—especially those managed by our Celtic fellow-citizens—may be generally described as "awfully agreeable."

A political economist would, on first thought, be apt to think that those trades which are most important to the life of men would be the best paid; that the wages of the bakers and the tailors, for instance, would be the highest of all. In the case of these last one would think the strong necessities of human vanity would also help to secure handsome pay for the workers. But, in fact, those two trades seem to be among the worst paid, and the shop-tailors, now on strike, say that a tailor, helped by his wife, can only make ten dollars a week. This no family can decently live on, and ought not to be expected to live on.

The singing judges in the late Baltimore Saengerfest awarded the prizes with such discrimination that when called upon for their reasons they were able to set them forth in a perfectly satisfactory manner. The office of prize judge was certainly a very difficult one; and it is evident that the gentlemen selected for the place not only acted from a sense of justice, but with a thorough musical knowledge and appreciation.

Queen VICTORIA keeps her sons on their travels. The Prince of WALES has been voyaging and traveling for the last dozen years, and has just returned from a visit to Egypt. The Duke of EDINBURGH, after visiting Australia and South America, is now in Japan—though it was reported a short time ago that the Mikado did not wish to see him. Prince ARTHUR will soon arrive in the New Dominion, and we hear that great preparations are being made in Halifax to give him a brilliant reception. This is an excellent training for these sprigs of royalty.

The King of Prussia has done a wise and right soldierly thing in ordering that the anniversary of Sadowa shall not any more be celebrated. The gallant Greeks had a law which forbade them to raise a trophy. They had so many fights among themselves that they felt a trophy-raising would make the growth of amicable feeling impossible. King WILLIAM has learned that beautiful Greek lesson, and says, in fact, that he does not desire to hurt the feelings of any German people—a sentiment that does him more honor than he could have from ten Sadowas or countless needle-guns.

Our Paris correspondent sends us the interesting assurance that the Empress of the Mangoes is really preparing to make a journey to the East and visit, at Constantinople, the great head of the Cossacks—ABDUL AZIZ KHAN. It will be a very extraordinary thing and out of all queenly etiquette; and yet it would be no more unprecedented than that visit of the Fadlalah to the Prince of WALES in London. Should Eugenia's visit take place, the ladies of the Harem will have a high time of it and the Turkish matrons on the "Woman question" will receive a revolutionary shock. Supposing the Empress means to go to Suez, it would be only a polite thing that she should first call on the Sultan, before paying the same compliment to his Viceroy.

English institutions are becoming "Americanized" with alarming rapidity. Hitherto it has been the custom of Ministerial M. P.'s for particular counties or boroughs to "recommend" to Government the names of candidates for local offices within their own districts, and as a general rule, their recommendations were attended to. But the other day, Sir PATRICK O'BRIEN, M. P. for Kings County, complained that his "recommendations" had not been duly honored, and boldly claimed the right of "patronage." And the Secretary for Ireland virtually acknowledged the validity of the claim. Before long, doubtless, we shall see our American system in full vogue in England. Truly we ought to feel a double sense of responsibility for all our political manners and customs when we observe that they are so assiduously imitated by the rulers of another great country, while having the force of law in our own.

CLOSE OF THE BURLESQUE SEASON.

The burlesque season at Niblo's is nearing a close. A partial change of performances was had last evening, when an audience that filled the house in every part welcomed the return of Miss LYDIA THOMPSON and of Mr. HARRY BUCKSTONE. The representations of yesterday included portions of "The Forty Thieves" and of "Ixion," while a slight favor of novelty was imparted to it by the farce of "Man the Good for Nothing." It was interrupted by no more unpleasant demonstrations than laughter and applause, and will probably progress with equal smoothness to-night, when it is to be repeated. The reign of Miss THOMPSON and her associates at Niblo's terminates with to-morrow evening. Miss THOMPSON herself is to benefit by the final entertainment, which will be attractive and successful.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

Convention in Massachusetts—Letter from Ralph Waldo Emerson—Address by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe.

The advocates of woman's suffrage held a Convention in Newburyport, Mass., on Wednesday, lasting throughout the day and evening. The sessions were largely attended. Letters from RALPH WALDO EMERSON and Professor ALEXANDER CROSBY were read, and addresses were made by WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, Mrs. JULIA WARD HOWE and others. Mr. EMERSON's letter was as follows:

CONCORD, July 21, 1869.

DEAR SIR: I am sorry to be forced to limit expectation, but in these days I find so much work that cannot be set aside laid out for me that I am forced to shelve all new tasks that are not imperative. So I must beg you to say, that the Woman's Suffrage Convention claim, fended in equity, and though perhaps it does not yet appear to say what precise form in practice it will and ought to take, yet the earnestness and thoughtfulness with which it is urged seem to me to mark an important step in civilization.

Respectfully,
(Signed) R. W. EMERSON.

Mrs. HOWE, when introduced, was greeted with warm applause. We quote a portion of her address:

Those congregations of hair cases who conjure the Sunday preachers in such fullness and affluency of attire, with such a pretty, pious bustle in seating and unseating themselves (I come from Newport, remember, ladies and gentlemen—what does the man of God, their spiritual pastor and master, feed them?) Something about hell that frightens them; something about Heaven that puzzles them; much, perhaps, about Trinity and atonement in which they strictly believe, but of which they do not understand a word. It is the best, perhaps, that can be had or expected. But I hesitate to a congregation of free-women would not long endure this phraseology and repetition, a mechanical music which smoothly accompanies frivolity, but does not distract it. "Don't put us to sleep," they would say. "Don't rock our social circle—we have enough of that now." Let us, Mr. Explorer, see thoughts of Christ, and things divine. Take some place line at your simplest leisure—the simplest word of your plainest sense, give to them a power which your endless variations can never of and deform." But the preacher will say, "You are a woman, and I am a man, and we have moral diseases. I don't know what you need or what you can bear." And I, for my part, believe that in order to have true women in the congregation, we must occasionally have a true woman in the pulpit, priding, therefore, that the preacher should be the preacher of the gospel open to our sex. I hope to see women nobly filling professorships in all the branches of education nearly allied to the needs and interests of women. Self-government is the first word of morals, and the last word of politics. This is why democracy is the best thing. It forbids a man to comply with the first conditions of morals, that is, to govern himself. Self-government must indeed be government. The man who is idle, coarse, and rapacious, is self-indulging, not self-governing. The substitution of the finest for the coarser motive is that which ennobles and elevates society. Two education of abolition always leads away from this result, as dangerous to the despot. It places the sovereign authority anywhere but where God has placed it, in every human heart. And the man, taught to obey, is distracted by distracted, illumination knows not that he himself is a star. Education can acquaint him with this fact, or conceal it from him. For he must remember that every generation is born helpless, and wholly of the money of that which rears and trains it. And this brings me to one of the most common and most polite arguments advanced nowadays against our measure, viz.: that womankind at large do not desire the suffrage. The immaturity of this argument is obvious to me; perhaps I can make it so to others. Do mankind at large desire the best life for all the children of the state, the state and spelling-book? Does the youth demand to be made acquainted with the higher mathematics, and the doctrine of pure reason? . . . . Now earnest men and earnest women are telling of this to the less thoughtful and instructed. They show woman a new ideal, sweet, free-souled, free-handed. "This is what you would be," say they. Half of your rights, all of your political estate is kept from you; only so much is doled out to you as will enable you to appear in a conceded equality with men. On an actual equality you are not to be allowed you to aspire. And I would have the world take note, awakened by admiration and encouraged by the earnest sympathy of true souls, womankind are asking for their own. And in connection with this new position of woman I have yet to mention the fact, that appeals to woman in fortunate position in behalf of the sex in general are sometimes met by a reply in which a certain satirical intention is obvious. One of these friends, on being invited to take part in the Suffrage Convention held in Boston last June, made reply to the following effect: "I have all the privileges that I desire. I am a happy wife and mother, and do not see that I have anything further to ask for." As this lady was wealthy, and of the denomination of Friends, I dare say that she had as little to desire for herself as possible, since she has no doubt ease and inward freedom. But she seems to have forgotten the fact that many of her sex are not happy wives and mothers, are not safe within a circle of admiring friends, but are struggling single-handed with the world, in legal and spiritual bondage. The thought of those should have called her from her luxurious fireside to examine into those things, or at least to hear the reports of those who thus examine. The good Samaritan was whole in heart and in purse when he took upon himself the necessities of him who had fallen among thieves. And Christ was not in need of anything when he healed diseases, and cast out demons. Like these, it becomes us, however prosperous ourselves, to find out what others want, and how to help them to it. We women must make common cause. We have been passive as a sex; we must now be active as a sex. We must say, "We are women; we consider nothing that is womanly is alien to us. The women within doors, and the women without, the women in velvet gowns, and the women in rags, the women who are well off that they cannot think of anything which they need, and the women so unfortunate that they can think of nothing which they do not need. We must meet to tell and to hear the sad story, to give and to receive the fitting counsel and comfort. For if men should say with truth that women are careless of the general interest of their sex, and specially concerned in their own individual welfare only, they would say what should make us sad and sorry, and throw upon us a blame and a shame from which we should make haste, by earnest thought and energetic action, to free ourselves. Let our efforts, feeble and desultory in themselves, but strong, because they are in the direction indicated by Providence, and knit up in the great work of human effort and divine result, initiate the earnestness of thought and action. Let us see to it that we do not build a mere temple of womanhood, in which the lessons of the past shall aid the claims of the future; in which the better beauty of the soul shall eclipse the transient bloom of youth and the frivolous form of fashion. The age asks much, and yet it requires much. Each of the thoughtful days which we devote to deliberation like the present, says its stone, hews and polished, in

AFFAIRS IN SPAIN.

The New Ministry—Constitution of the Cortes—The Future—Republican Movements—Progress of Protestantism.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MADRID, Wednesday, July 14, 1869.

After most prodigious and wearying efforts, General PRIM succeeded last night only in definitely forming his new Ministry, Tremendous exertions were made both by him and by the Regent to induce Señor MARTOS to join it, attempts which were not abandoned till 8 o'clock last evening. MARTOS was deaf to all entreaty. The new Ministry is as follows:

Presidency and War—General PRIM.
Marine—Admiral TOPETE.
State (Foreign Affairs)—Señor SILVELA.
Governacion (Home)—Señor SAGASTA.
Grace and Justice—Señor SORRILLA.
Fomento (Public Works and Instruction)—Señor ROSSEGARDY.
Hacendo (Finance)—Señor ANDAHAZ.
Ultramar (Colonies)—Señor RIGURRA.

The new blood introduced is Señor ANDAHAZ, who takes charge of Finance, in place of Señor FIGUEROLA, of capitation tax memory; Señor ROSSEGARAY, who sees to the public works and instruction, and Señor RIGURRA, who looks after the Colonial Department, which since the resignation of Señor LOPEZ DE ATARA has been subsided to provisionally by Admiral TOPETE. ROSSEGARAY is a Unionista, and his eloquent speech against religious intolerance, in which he derided himself of the discoveries of the recent calcined human remains at the Quemadero de la Cruz or burning place of the Inquisition, to illustrate his point, created great sensation at the time and marked him in popular estimation for a distinguished career. What kind of a Minister he will make remains to be proved. As a Unionista he comes from a bad school, but if he has sense and discernment to look beyond his party, and to turn a deaf ear to the promptings of its leader, Señor RIOS ROSAS, he may do great service to his country and to liberty. Señor RIGURRA is an old Liberal of the Democratic school. He takes a department there is some thought of suppressing for economy's sake, (Colonies,) but which at present is second to none in importance. It has the wide questions of Cuba, Porto Rico and Manila to deal with. Perhaps the most important change effected is the shifting of Señor RUIZ SORRILLA from Public Works and Instruction to Grace and Justice, in the place of the ultra Unionista MARTIN DE HERRERA, whose recent circular caused the whole upstanding. As Minister of Fomento, RUIZ SORRILLA has been in the Government from the first days of the revolution, and has signalized himself by many acts of noble initiation. His decree ordering the inventories of the cathedrals, &c., which led to the assassination of the Governor of Burgos, has been the means of recovering not buried treasures of silver and gold only, though of these it has a goodly number to boast of, but piles of rich and rare manuscripts, books and literary and archæological treasures, which the dust of ages and the ignorance and carelessness of their ecclesiastical custodian had long hidden from recollection and from view. In the Cathedral vaults and cloisters of the grand old City of Toledo alone there were brought to light valuables of this kind in such profusion that they are now forming a museum of them in the place, and they are of such a character as to be worth crossing to Europe specially to see. Besides this, Señor SORRILLA is the author of the complete revolution in the educational institutes of Spain, which is already beginning to work wonders, and also of the decree for national pantheon, in which house sepulture is to be given to the illustrious dead. He is a ready and eloquent speaker, somewhat dictatorial and vehement, yet one of those in whom those objectionable characteristics are easily lost sight of in his earnestness. The clerical party hate him for his liberality, and the only possible thing which may now mar his administration of the department on which they completely depend, (Grace and Justice,) is the fear he may be a little too severe with them. Much, however, depends upon themselves. If they continue in a line of conduct openly antagonistic to the new order of things the revolution has brought about in the destruction of their ancient and exclusive privileges and the establishment of religious equality, they will not find him so hard to deal with. If they, in short, adopt the respectable and creditable line of conduct followed universally by the Roman Catholic clergy England and the United States, they will not be much the worse for his administration of their temporal interests; but if they cling to the traditions of the past, and that Catholic exclusiveness so arrogantly laid down in the ridiculous manifesto of Don CARLOS I sent you a week ago, they will find he can make "Jordan a hard road for them to travel." The day has quite gone by for Spain to yield herself up to Catholic intolerance, or the intolerance of any one sect of religious partisans. The Departments of Grace and Justice has in addition to the clergy, the regulating all the judicial and magisterial appointments, and its importance is therefore readily recognized. The retirement of Señor FIGUEROLA from the Finance Department, and that too before his budget of estimated expenditure for the present financial year is voted, is a marked event. He has clung to office with remarkable tenacity, having been "in" since the first. His financial policy has been much condemned. But what could any Finance Minister do with such crippled resources as Spain has? The legacy left by the late Queen's Government was a fearful state of chaos, debt and ruin. Señor FIGUEROLA has done his best in work out of it, but every step he has taken seems only to have plunged her deeper in the mire. He has lacked the moral courage to set his back against extravagance, and, therefore, an unbridled expenditure has marked his administration, to the infinite delight of the legions of bloodsuckers poor Spain continues to nourish in her bosom, but at the cost of adding fearfully to her burden of debt. He has tided over extremities by loans, but he has done little to get the revenue in a way of righting itself. It remains to be seen whether his successor, Señor ANDAHAZ, will be more fortunate. He is a Unionista, and one of the Vice-Presidents of the Cortes.

THE FUTURE.

General PRIM will "introduce" his new Ministry to the Cortes this evening, and it is said will make a speech defining his future policy. His having offered places in the Cabinet to the two eminent Republicans, Señor CASTELLAR and Señor PI Y MARGALL, is denied by some of the monarchical papers, but I am in a position from my private knowledge to reaffirm it. I can even give a few details, though I cannot tell all I know without violating a confidence newspaper correspondents ought ever to recognize. On the night of Saturday week some ten or eleven of the leading Republicans were quietly met together in the office of the Igualdad. Among them were MM. ORENSE, GARINO, CASTELLAR, PI Y MARGALL, TUTAU and others. They were joined by Señor FIGUEROLA, who stated that at the direct request of PRIM, Señor RUIZ SORRILLA had asked him to offer places in his new ministry to the two gentlemen in question, he (PRIM) being fond of the recollections of the Progresista and Democrata, and wishing by a alliance to destroy the influence of the Unionistas. SORRILLA was to wait in the Café Imperial till 10 o'clock that night for his answer. The thing was discussed, but resulted in Señor FIGUEROLA going to the Café himself as the later named, and asking for more time to consider it and to submit it to a larger meeting of the party. The next day there was a very enthusiastic Republican meeting. CASTELLAR and PI Y MARGALL stuck to their first refusal. ORENSE and one or two others thought they ought to yield. TUTAU and others vehemently opposed. Finally, they authorized FIGUEROLA to go to SORRILLA and ask him to say to PRIM that they refused, but that they might be induced to enter his Ministry temporarily, so as to settle off pending financial and other necessary business and let the House adjourn for the recess, provided he (PRIM) would pledge himself to propose, the first thing in September or October, when the Cortes reassembled, the abolition of clause 86 from the Constitution, (the monarchy clause.) PRIM declined to give this pledge, intimating that he would use then according to what he could best judge of the will of the nation, and again urged them to join him, but as there his entreaties failed. Feeling, however, that their motives might be misunderstood by their party generally, they declined, and decided to wait for the debates which, if the Republic, which they felt certain is not far distant.

PROTESTANTISM.

The Spanish Protestant Church here is making steady progress. It is now conducted in a large hall in the Calle Madera Bajo, No. 8, capable of holding over 1,000 persons. Services are held in Spanish every Thursday evening and twice on Sundays. Pastor RUEF's congregation keeps up. Last Sunday morning, for instance, I was there with the thermometer at over 100° Fahrenheit, and yet every sitting and standing place was occupied, even not beyond the door and into the street. So intense was the interest that not one of the 1,000 or 1,100 persons present tried to leave the room, notwithstanding the intense heat.

The first Spanish Protestant burial in Madrid took place on Monday, and has broken up Catholic unity in a most vulnerable point. A lady member of Pastor RUEF's Spanish Protestant Church, Dona PAULINA GOMEZ, of very good family, died on Sunday night. Her family desired to inter her in the General Cemetery, which hitherto has never been polluted by the interment of heretics of any description—in fact, former efforts made such illegal. They applied to the Vicario-General, but he refused permission on the ground that she was a Protestant. Her family urged that her ancestors lay there, but to no use. No Protestant should be buried in that peculiarly Catholic spot. Application was made to the British Legation for burial in the British Cemetery, a sweet, retired, miniature Greenwood, devoted to the interment of English, American, German or other foreigners who die here. The grant for the said cemetery having been given in 1854 by the Government of ISABELLA to the British Minister, on the condition that it was to be in no way used for Spanish subjects, this request could not be complied with. The British Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. FRENCH, who is acting until a successor is appointed to Sir JOHN CRAMPTON, who left for England and for obscurity last week, intimated that if the Spanish Government asked for the interment to take place in the English God's Acre it should be denied. In this dilemma, and in view of the fact that the twenty-four hours prescribed by law for interment after death were rapidly passing away, the Committee of the Spanish Protestant Church applied for advice to the President of the Cortes, Don NICOLAS MARIA RIVERO, who is at the same time first Alcalde, or Mayor, of Madrid. Determining to test the full meaning of the religious liberty decreed in articles 20, 21 of the new Constitution, RIVERO instantly issued the following order to the Roman Catholic functionary charged with the control of the General Cemetery:

AYUNTAMIENTO DE MADRID, July 12, 1869.

DEAR SIR: Doña PAULINA GOMEZ, inhabitant of the Calle de Jumanta, No. 14, belonging to the Spanish Protestant Church of Madrid, died at half past 5 o'clock last night. Under the active exercise of worship thereof been decreed by the Cortes Constituyentes, she has a right as a Spaniard and as a Protestant, to have her remains interred in the General Cemetery and with the ceremonies of the religion to which she belonged. In consideration of the number of the population, and, there now having elapsed many hours since her decease, it is necessary that within the period prescribed by law her body should be buried and all the conditions of the law fulfilled, to avoid the dangerous consequence which a contagious malady might occasion, I request myself therefore to your Excellency, I, without loss of a single moment, you will please to give the proper orders to those charged with the General Cemetery, to the end that within the time previously indicated the interment of the body of the said Doña PAULINA GOMEZ may be verified, you requiring only the presentation of the proper medical certificate.

God guard you for many years.

NICOLAS MARIA RIVERO.

To the Vicario-General Eclesiastico, Alcalde.

The answer to this was a well-known and well-understood plea of sickness and inability to attend to it. Again they go to Señor RIVERO. He at once issues an order for the interment, and deputies an official of the Corporation to accompany the body to the cemetery and see to its burial in the Protestant form, with imperative orders to force the gates if necessary, and to take into custody any who resisted or obstructed. Accordingly, at 4 o'clock on Monday evening, under this escort, and followed by over 200 of the attendants at the Spanish Protestant Church, the deceased lady was taken to the cemetery. Protestant service was held first in her house, and again by the side of the grave. The funeral procession passed through the streets with the greatest order, and with marked signs of respect from the populace. To their credit, be it said, the priests offered no resistance—in fact, three of them locked on the while in the grounds. What a change! A year ago there were no openly avowed Spanish Protestants, and if there had been, and the body of one of them had been on its way to the place of interment, it would have been torn to pieces and burnt by the infuriated populace. Spanish cemeteries are awful places. The bodies are not buried in the ground, but stowed away in niches in the walls, like gas ovens, with the coffins end on, and the mouth of the catacomb covered with an elliptical slab recording the name of the deceased. They impress one with no reverential feelings, but all is coldness and gloom.

AFFAIRS IN ITALY.

Franco-Italian Negotiations—Speculations as to Results—Parliamentary Prospects—The Senate and Country Pictures.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FLORENCE, Tuesday, July 13, 1869.

It is probable that we shall know positively in a few days the result of the conversations or negotiations which have been going on for some time between the President of the Italian Cabinet and the agent of the French Emperor. When Signor, or rather Monsieur, CONTI, the Private Secretary of NAPOLEON III., found it necessary for his wife's health, passing by Vichy, to come to the healing waters of Monte Catini, rumors and conjectures of a political character were immediately set in motion. Monte Catini is at the convenient distance of twenty miles by rail from Florence, and hardly a day has passed since the French Emperor's agent has been there that General MENABREA has not made him a visit. Such an intimacy awakened a lively interest in the public to know who was in the wind. The interviews are ended, and General MENABREA has gone off to Turin to make his report to the King.

If any inference can be placed in what is reported, a solution is to be found for the Roman question. Not only is the Papal occupation, as it now exists, to cease, but the Italians are to have all the territory now remaining to the Pope, up to the walls of Rome. Only a bag of temporal power is to be left to the Pontiff; that is to say, he is to be the grand captain commanding in the citadel of the Eternal City, with a mixed garrison. If this should prove to be the plan, and an agreement between the Governments of France and Italy, on such a basis, should be brought about, it will close the long-continued discussion upon the question of the Pope's temporal rule. It would not be long before the Italians—already at the gates of Rome—would be able to prove the Pontiff back upon the Aventine and Vatican, and within the limits of the Leonine City, where he might be left to rule with the absolute principles of the Middle Ages, if he should still have a taste for that dark and wicked system.

Of course it is understood that this concession to the Italian Government is the compensation to be made for the alliance of this Power with Germany to whatever eventualities. The Marquis PEPOLI, the Italian Minister at Vienna, has been here on a visit, which does not claim to have any other than a diplomatic character. Signor CONTI, the French Emperor's Private Secretary and Agent, is on the point of leaving Monte Catini, which shows that the cure, whatever may be its nature, is ended. It is should come out that the question of Rome is to be put to rest in some such manner as here indicated, it will be a solid temporary gain for the Italian Ministry, but it will reopen in Parliament a new topic of argument. The Neapolitans have always said that if all prospect of getting the City of Rome should be cut off then by every effort on their part, hope should be revived of making Naples the capital of the Kingdom of Italy.

PARLIAMENTARY PROSPECTS.

The prospects seems to be good that the Ministry, instead of being brought down, as was a little while ago threatened, is to have a breathing spell of several months. The Commission of Inquiry on the Parliamentary corruption charge has finished its long and tiresome examination, and has authorized its President and Secretary to declare that no illegal participation has been proved. It is now believed that Parliament will not be called together until November. Some of the members of the Commission have already left for their homes. It is a triumph of the immaculate party, and what, with weariness of the discussion and the heat of the season, the public is nearly worn out.

THE REASON—COUNTRY SCENES.

The land now is in the full glory of its Summer beauty. A walk to Sesto villa, by the flower-scented, quiet roads that wind among the low hills, is one of the pleasantest recreation of the season. How many of these charming country-houses are associated with some literary, artistic, or historic name. In that one lived "LORENZO" LEVEN, and over there was passed a great part of WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR's long life. On this ridge stands the old pile, with a half-convent aspect, in which a part of the story of HAWTHORNE's "Transformation" was placed. Half a mile beyond the hill of San Miniato, within A few years, ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE has built his rural nest. For a long period now this foreign name, borne by literary mother, brother and wife, has been associated with Florence. With his own artistic knowledge and taste, and a considerable expenditure of money, Mr. TROLLOPE has converted a large old country-house, half gone to decay, into a Gothic castle—a sort of Strawberry Hill or reduced Abbotsford. It is a strange object in the landscape, and contrasts strongly with the usual style of Italian construction. The house has an air of considerable pretense, but within is found greater dignity of proportions and beauty of artistic decorations than the smashed-bandbox jumble of the exterior promises. The double staircase, with its height of fifty or sixty feet, is noble, and the antique objects upon it, or within view from its elevation, are sufficiently numerous and valuable to make a good beginning for a public collection or a museum in America. The library, with its 9,000 volumes, it is not an abuse of terms to call a superb room. Mr. TROLLOPE, to his fine skill as a literary man, has added the knowledge and taste of an artist, a combination of qualities not often found. Such is the exclamation of all who visit this charming house. On seeing so much that appeals to the sense of the beautiful, one feels that life is not long enough for its enjoyment. A man of books, past sixty, who has at length been able to prepare himself such a retreat, is to be sympathized with rather than envied, because the years that remain are reduced to so narrow a circuit.

Near Mr. TROLLOPE's villa is to pass the royal road—is, indeed, it may be called—which for more than three miles winds over the hills and along the sylvan declivities on the south side of Florence. You who have not seen Terrazzo in Italy for two or three years, will, on coming back, be surprised to find a growing grape added to a city which already has so many charms. I know nothing in Europe, of its kind, more beautiful than this new walk and drive. It seems as if the cities of late years were rivaling each other by the multiplication of attractions, of which trees, and flowers, and water, and living green picturesquely mass, are the simple health-giving elements.

From Our Own Correspondent.

UNION POINT, GREENE COUNTY, Ga., Monday, July 26, 1869.

The telegraph has long since announced the discharge of TURNER by the United States Commissioner on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to justify a committal. In this decision of the Examining Court every body concurred except the party who achieved a disgraceful notoriety by his efforts to injure TURNER in the hope that he might get his place, and who only succeeded in getting a broken head and the record of a dozen men swearing that they would not believe him on his oath.

It is currently rumored, and one man told me that he saw the letter, that Mr. CHARLES SUMNER wrote to Mr. SWAYNE entreating the latter not to press the case against TURNER, as "it would seriously damage the party," but that SWAYNE indignantly refused to allow any party consideration to turn him from his duty to the public, to maintain the law and punish its violation. Although, as I have stated, there is a general concurrence in the judgment of the examining Court, there is an equally general belief that though TURNER may not be technically guilty of the crime with which he was charged, he was very intimately associated with those who stole the unsigned bills, forged the signatures and put them in circulation, and that, reversed though he be, his relations with MARIAN HARRIS were the reverse of spiritual.

The indignation among the negroes of Macon against SWAYNE is very great. Were it not for the influence and advice of TURNER's counsel, (who, by the way, were all prominent Democrats and men of high social standing,) the negroes would have punished SWAYNE's desertion of their cause by "riding him on a rail." They are said to have resolved to withdraw their patronage from his paper, and to combine to punish him in every legitimate manner.

The investigation has done great good by showing that the white men had no disposition to persecute TURNER; that, on the contrary, some of the leading lawyers defended him, and that the outside public did not interfere in the least. It has shown them that because TURNER was personally obnoxious to the white people, and because his appointment as Postmaster at Macon was very offensive to the people of Macon, they did not allow their prejudices to influence them against him on his trial, and that the only white man who exerted himself to convict TURNER was he who has always pretended to be the friend and protector of the black race.

On the whole, I think that the result of the "Turner case" will be of benefit. It has proved, or ought to have proved, that negroes like TURNER are not fit for high offices of trust and responsibility, the duties of which require education, administrative ability and integrity; and it has certainly proved to the negroes that while those who pretended to be their special friends and who tried to persuade them that the white men wanted to persecute and degrade them, were false friends and used them as tools to carry out selfish purposes. The white men really were just and impartial, and used their influence to have justice done.

The effort is being made by prudent men throughout the State to effect a compromise of the negro eligibility question, so far as relates to the excluded members of the Legislature. It is proposed that the sitting members shall resign, that Governor BULLOCK issue a new election, and that the voters then decide whether they prefer to be represented by negroes or by white men. This course would relieve the Legislature from the embarrassment they are now in—reputed, on the one hand, to resent their action and exclude members whom they have declared duly elected, and who have their vested rights in the seats; and, on the other, that if they do not resent the negroes and adhere to their action, they will provoke Congressional interference, and reopen the question of Reconstruction. I have no idea that this course will be adopted, because, first, I do not believe that the sitting members will resign; and, second, if they were to do so, I believe that Mr. BULLOCK would not order a new election, but would consider the negroes as de jure representatives, by virtue of their former election.

It is universally conceded that in the election for members of the next Legislature negroes are as eligible as white men. No attempt is contemplated to prevent their running. The decision of the Supreme Court will be read in accordance with the law, and it will be obeyed; and as this Legislature expires after its next session it is really of very little practical importance whether the negroes are or are not recseated. It is not proposed, as I have said it seized, to pass any laws excluding negroes ineligible for office. If such a bill were proposed I don't believe that it could pass, and it it did it could only be valid as to those negroes who had not reached the age to vote at the date of its passage. But no such measure is in contemplation. The decision of the Supreme Court will be universally obeyed, and the whole question will be left to the ballot-box, where it properly belongs.

Even if it could be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the members of the General Assembly that they have the power to exclude the white and recent the negro members, and if the question could be relieved of all difficulty in this regard and reduced to one of simple expediency, I do not believe that a majority could be induced to adopt that course, solely on account of their objection to negro members so much as their fear of the consequences to the State if Mr. BULLOCK were to secure a majority in both Houses, who would blindly obey his orders and follow his lead. This fear is not confined to Democrats or partisan opponents of Mr. BULLOCK. It possesses very many who are Republicans, and those who labored most strenuously in the cause of reconstruction. I met to-day, at his place a prominent State Senator, who is a Republican, and who to my personal knowledge contributed largely to the success of reconstruction, who told me that he thought it safer for the people to trust Congressional interference and a renewal of military government, than to voluntarily abandon the entire control of the State, her purse and "her interests" to BULLOCK and his gang." He added that there are very many in the Senate and in the House, who think as he does, and that it is not fair to attribute the action of those bodies, if they decline to resent the negro members, to any partisan prejudice or to any spirit of defiance of Congress. In illustration of his argument, he pointed to the removal of Mr. CRATTON from the office of Treasurer of the State Railroad, and the appointment of Mr. BLODGETT, and said that if BULLOCK went much further in the same direction he would certainly be impeached and convicted.

It must not be supposed that the opposition to Mr. BULLOCK is opposition to the Republican Party. Look at Mr. BARD, of the Atlanta Era; look at Mr. BRYANT; look at Mr. AKERMAN, and numbers of others who are zealous Republicans, who are more bitter in their denunciation of Mr. BULLOCK than the Democrats. Give him, they reason, a majority in both Houses which will sustain him, right or wrong, and Judge BROWN's prediction, that he would bankrupt the State in a year, will be speedily fulfilled.

I mention these facts to explain the attitude of the State and the sentiment of the people, and to show that "hostility to the negroes" and "defiance of the will of Congress" are not the motives of their action. They really think that they would be better off under such a government as that of Virginia or Mississippi, than under the present Executive armed with Legislative power to carry out his object. Many things have contributed to this conviction. The "unauthorized drafts" of $85,000, and then of $35,000, after the Legislature had condemned the first drafts as illegal. The alleged corrupt use of official patronage—the flagrant abuse of the pardoning power, by which confessed murderers, burglars, ravishers and house-burners are let loose upon the community, in contempt of the verdicts of juries and the judgment of the Bench, and the general corruption and plunder which are said to pervade the Government, have made all classes of intelligent people, without distinction of party, unite into a party of self-preservation, to oppose everthing the Executive proposes. Before public opinion of the North condemns the people of Georgia, it would be well for them to follow the injunction, "Audi alteram partem." If they do, they will hear much which their consciences cannot reject, and which will convince them that it is not a spirit of rebellion which prompts them to avail themselves of any means within their reach to defend themselves against what all believe to be a great peril.

THE CROPS.

In this portion of Georgia, and in that north of this point, the six weeks' drought has done incalculable damage. All the upland corn has been cut off fully one-half, and the lowland corn is not nearly as good as it ought to be. Cotton is pitiably small and stunted, and where it has been highly stimulated by ammoniated manures the lower branches have turned yellow and are withering. I have seen, also, in some of the most promising cotton-fields, unmistakable traces of the boll-worm, eating into the young bolls and causing them to dis and drop off. On Saturday night and yesterday heavy rains fell through a portion of this part of the country, which may be of benefit to the cotton by giving it a new growth, which may produce fruit early enough to mature before frost. But with the most propitious seasons now, the cropwill fall below what might have been expected six weeks ago. As a necessary consequence the farming community are very much depressed. They expended large sums in manures, &c., to make a large crop this year, and I am really afraid they will do but little more than clear their expenses. In some cases within my personal observation they will not even do this; and if the boll-worm becomes general, as there is much reason to fear, they will loose to a ruinous extent.

In the southern portion of the State things are in a more promising condition, but even there the crop will not be as large as it was last year. I am satisfied that those who are looking for a large yield of cotton to lower the market will be sorely disappointed. I never saw cotton so small at this time of the year as it is now. It has two months to grow, it is true, but those two months ought to be spent maturing the fruit, not in adding to the size of the plant.

QUONDAM.

Attempted Wife Murder in New-Haven.

From the New-Haven Journal, July 29.

About 10:30 o'clock yesterday forenoon the people in the vicinity of Congress-avenue, near Lafayette-street, were startled by the reports of a pistol. Immediately after a man was seen to run from the lager-beer saloon of H. L. HAUGEN and to go into the German boarding-house in the building known as the Old Museum, kept by CHRISTIAN WETZEL. Upon entering the saloon, a woman named CHRISTINA NORQUEST was found severely wounded in the face, neck and breast. From her and two other persons it was learned that her husband, PETER NORQUEST, came into the saloon and called for a glass of beer, which was given him by Mrs. NORQUEST, who was at the bar at the time. He drank the first glass and called for a second, and drank part of that. He then looked cautiously about the room, and threw a glance into the back room. Seeing no one, he suddenly produced a double-barreled pistol, and pointing it at his wife discharged its contents into her person. The pistol was loaded with two balls in each barrel. NORQUEST, immediately after committing the deed, fled to his boarding-house and hid in the garret. Officer CAMPBELL, after a short search, found and arrested him. Dr. WHITTEMORE was called to attend the woman. He found that one ball of the pistol had pierced the upper right lobe of the lungs and that the woman was suffering considerable from internal hemorrhage. In accordance with his directions she was taken to the hospital by Officer REILLY. The wound in the lung is considered very serious, making her case a very critical one. The other wounds were not of a dangerous character. She may, possibly, recover, but yesterday she appeared very feeble.

The parties were married about six years ago, in Sweden. About the end of November last NORQUEST came to this country, landing in New-York. Soon after, his wife came over, bringing a Swede girl with her. She went to Buffalo and stayed with her husband ten days. Then she came to New-Haven, and engaged to work for Mr. HAUGEN as a servant in his family. NORQUEST came to New-Haven and went to work as a blacksmith in the New-York and New-Haven Railroad repair shops. His wife refused to live with him, and when Mr. HAUGEN was away she landed the bar. She says that she married NORQUEST against her own wishes, to please her parents, and that she never liked him, and that she could not and would not live with him.

The prisoner claimed that she had been improperly intimate with a man in a beer shop in State-street, but he could not give his name. He said he had given his wife a parasol, a shawl, a pair of shoes and six sovereigns, and tried to have her live with him, but she would not. He took hold of his arm, and said he meant to have shot her there, and that he did not want to kill her. When told that he had shot her in the breast, and that she might die, he shook his head, and said with trembling lips and a voice tremulous with emotion, "No! No! I didn't kill her!" [illegible] was alive, he said, [illegible] was well. [illegible] to see a friend [illegible] that he had two shots [illegible] he meant to kill himself [illegible] how long it would be before they would kill him. He had been a sober, industrious man and a good citizen until this unfortunate occurrence. Recently he had been laboring under great mental excitement, refusing food at most times and giving other evidence of being in great trouble.

The woman, with whom the woman has been living, [illegible] Officer CAMPBELL and by Dr. WHITTEMORE. She is about 21 years old.

TRAGEDY IN NEW-ORLEANS.

A Young Girl Stabbed by her Lover—Her Wounds Dangerous Wounded.

From the New-Orleans Picayune, July 26.

About 10 o'clock Friday night the City Park was made the scene of one of the most shocking tragedies that has occurred in our city for years. The victim is a young girl, about 17 years of age, named CAROLINE KERCHEIN, whose parents reside in Algiers, but who has been employed for the last two years as a milliner's apprentice. About eighteen months since she made the acquaintance of a young man named SALVADOR CARLOTTE, a tailor.

The acquaintance on the part of the girl ripened into affection, and, under promises of marriage, as she alleges, he succeeded in depriving her of her good name and woman's honor. Young, inexperienced, and all but a child in age, seem that she has clung to her seducer, despite of outrage and violence which his Slavic and domineering disposition has frequently subjected her to. About a year since, in an outburst of passion, he struck her with a knife, and inflicted a severe and dangerous wound in her left side. She recovered from this, and, understanding by the attack on her life kept up her evil intercourse with him.

But, about a month since, he announced to her his intention of marrying another person. "I will stab you to death if you do!" replied the heart-broken girl. "If you feel with me I'll lay you out!" was the savage reply.

But notwithstanding his dark looks and threatening aspect, the girl did not believe he meant her personal violence. And when he invited her Friday night to accompany him to the City Park, she received the invitation with joy and went with him accordingly. Arriving there they proceeded to a secluded place, near the center of the Park, where the young man attempted to exact from her a promise that she would not attempt to interfere with his contemplated marriage. This promise she refused to give, and almost on the instant he attacked her with the fatal knife, inflicting Three wounds, one in the dicted upon her with a keen, sharp-bladed knife, either of which will prove mortal—one over the left breast and two in the side. The girl then grasped the knife with her hand and held it so tightly that the keen blade severed one of her fingers, and begged piteously for him not to kill her.

Whether a momentary pity took possession of him or not, he at all events consented to spare her in case she would swear never to tell who had stabbed her. This oath the dying girl has faithfully kept to. Leaving her as he supposed, dying in the Park, he made his way back to the city. But the girl had strength enough left to drag herself to the street, and from thence to the residence of Mr. BAKER, at the head of Bienville-street. To the family of this gentleman she told her story, and a carriage was immediately hurried in, which conveyed her to the office of the Chief of Police. Dr. RITCHIE was immediately sent for, and after examining her wounds pronounced them mortal, and directed that she be sent to the Charity Hospital.

To the surprise and satisfaction of Captain CAIN she refused, to reveal the name of her assailant; but in her delirium she uttered his name. On this clue the Chief and Officer MARKS set out to arrest the murderer. After long and patient waiting they found him, apparently asleep in the Degrades Street Market. They at once proceeded to the residence of Recorder BAKER, and getting a search warrant, started for his residence. Here his clothes were found. The pants and shoes were plentifully besprinkled with blood, but his coat had just been washed by his mother. The pants were hung out to dry under her arm just as she was in the act of leaving the house with them. Notwithstanding the thorough washing to which it had been subjected, the coat still displayed one or two deep blood stains.

At 9 o'clock last night the reporter, in company with the Chief of Police, visited the wounded girl at the hospital. She was sleeping at the time, her face flushed with fever, and breathing heavily. Her light brown hair, long and disheveled, lay in thick shining masses on the pillow, where it pictured, as in a frame, a face singularly pretty. The slender, almost fragile form, outlined beneath the coverlet, appeared disposed in a frame ill prepared to sustain the fearful wounds she had received. She looked as if life was slowly ebbing away.

As soon as she awakened from her fitful slumber she asked the Chief, whom she recognized, if he had brought "him with him," meaning CARLOTTE.

"No," said the Chief, "but I will to-morrow."

"Oh, do," she said, "I want to see him. You won't punish him, will you?" And the eager eyes and parted lips showed how warm at her wounded heart dwelt the image of the ruffian stabber yet.

THE ANTI-RENT WAR.

The Arrest of the Greenbush Rioters—Condition of the Wounded.

From the Troy Times, July 29.

Detectives ENGLISH and KIRKE returned from Greenbush yesterday afternoon, whither they went to arrest the man WILLIAM WHITBECK and his accomplices in the recent affray with Deputy Sheriff GRIGGS and posse at the house of WHITBECK. They found the neighborhood entirely quiet, and had no difficulty whatever in serving their processes upon the parties interested. Mr. WHITBECK was so low from the injuries he received during the melée that it is not probable he will be able to leave his bed for some time to come. The ball which lodged in the head, the ball passing around under the scalp and coming out near the temple. He was about the first man to fall, and both he and his friends persist in the statement that Deputy Sheriff WHITBECK, of Albany, was the first person to begin the shooting. It is said that the two sons of WILLIAM WHITBECK, when they saw their father fall, became perfectly infuriated, and fought with a courage amounting to desperation, driving half a dozen of the Albany crowd before them like so many frightened sheep. The men for whom Officers KIRKE and ENGLISH had warrants all expressed themselves willing to come to Troy with them; but the officers concluded upon the whole to accept their parole to appear here on Friday (to-morrow) and surrender themselves to the authorities. In the afternoon, however, BENJAMIN V. DEGRAFF, father-in-law of Mr. WHITBECK, and one of the persons named in the warrant, appeared in the city, and calling on the District-Attorney, desired to give bail for an appearance. He was taken before Judge INGALLS and held to bail in the sum of $6,000. Mr. DEGRAFF is a gentleman about 60 years of age. He was present at the riot, he says, as a spectator—others say as an accomplice, encouraging resistance.

There has been no apparent change in the condition of the two men most seriously wounded, Deputy Sheriff GRIGGS and WHITBECK. The former was visited at Sandlake yesterday by Dr. MOSHER of Albany and Dr. TEN EYCK of Bloomingrove, accompanied by Colonel CHURCH. He is unable to speak in consequence of the wound in his mouth, and the three bullets yet within his body could not be found. The crisis in his case has not been reached, and it is impossible to tell the result. Deputy WHITBECK was comfortable last evening. The ball which wounded him has not been found.

District-Attorney BAKER will institute an examination into the circumstances of the affray before Justice NEARY or DONOHUE to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. The conduct of the officer cannot be too highly commended. When he first heard of the occurrence he took measures to acquaint himself with all the particulars of the case, personally visiting the scene of the disturbance—and advised Deputy Sheriff HOLMES to summon a posse and arrest the participants in the affray. We are satisfied Mr. BAKER will do all in his power to vindicate the laws and punish its guilty offenders, whoever they may be.

Of this sum the principal wishes $4,000, and the assistant $1,000. The bill has not yet been paid, the directors of the Company regarding it as rather exorbitant.

The Registration of Women.

To the Editor of The New-York Times:

The letter in the TIMES of yesterday on the "Registration of Women," by "E. L.," reminds me of the familiar anecdote of Sir ISAAC NEWTON, who, being fond of having his cat and kittens in his study, and yet annoyed at having two open his door for they heaven and earth, was struck with the happy thought of a little gate cut in the bottom of the door. The plan was executed and the puzzlepuzzler took his seat to enjoy the victory; presently the cat discovered her privilege and pushing the larger gate wide, passed out, when the kittens immediately followed her through the same door, leaving the wise man to fall back in his armchair and curse at his stupidity in having had a small gate cut for the kittens.

Now we are not aware of philosophers, so to be sure all surprising that we fall into as great errors as did he; it is only more reprehensible when we perpetrate them upon matters, instead of our study doors, and, in lieu of cats, instead of cats.

What "E. L." says of "legal consciousness and personal responsibility" is what every woman in a normal condition of body and mind must feel, as she shrinks from the thoughts of such a public exposé of what should be sacred with a shrever far more infinite than what she should feel at being "gifted" by one so self-evidently unworthy. To my own mind there has always seemed a paradox in the idea that a woman should ask separation of a man who has conferred so great a blessing by delivering her from the horrors of an unhappy marriage. But this is not the phase of the question that seems to have inspired "E. L.'s" vehemence.

He evidently has a strong glimmering of a deeper truth. But instead of striking right to the root of it, as he doubtless is able to do, having your editorial voucher as a "learned gentleman, well versed in the principles of law as well as of human nature," he aims desperately upon what is a mere twig of an evil tree, whose deep roots ramify into every fibre of the social structure, and whose Upas-exhalations permeate every breath, till the sacred joys of love, the bliss of marriage and the glory of parentage are ruthlessly blighted, or so perverted that fiends must laugh to see the hollow bitter semblance of what in their true form are the one taste of things heavenly that link earthly beings to the higher spheres.

The letter of "E. L." demonstrates that a higher order of beings than those named by POPE "rush in where angels fear to tread," for, demolishing with the ability that he does the weak sisters who foolishly seek in gold a balm for broken hearts, he does not appear to even suspect the holy ground he touches upon, from the precincts of which such vital lessons are crying out to deafened ears. It is to the root of the whole marriage question that the blow needs to be struck. Till then Amanda Crummy will rise up and multiply; the divorce records will swell, and houses that should be the abode of peace and virtue will be desecrated, and hearts rent and torn by anguish unutterable.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Nothing was done yesterday. The day was entirely quiet, as the rest of this week will be. Next week will be a little more interesting. On Tuesday, the 3d of August, Messrs. A. D. MILLER, JR., & BROTHER have at Orange, N. J., a positive sale of 140 desirable villa plots. Orange is situated four miles from Newark, by which it is connected with horse cars, thirteen miles from New-York, and fifty-two minutes in time by the Morris and Essex Railroad; and, although called a town, it is really a city of 12,000 inhabitants. It is chiefly occupied for residences, and within its limits, and its suburbs, East, West and South Orange, are magnificent country seats, as well as smaller mansions built and occupied by New-York business men. It presents rare advantages to those who desire a country home near New-York. For ease and frequency of access, beauty and variety of scenery, for healthfulness of climate, for the intelligence and moral order of its population—in short, for all those considerations which combine to render a region attractive as a family residence, it is believed that the vicinity of Orange possesses advantages not surpassed by any other place in the vicinity of New-York. It is well supplied with churches of all denominations, fine academies and schools. One of the most attractive features of this beautiful country are the magnificent drives that from the City of Orange diverge in every direction; all varieties are to be found there to suit the fancy of the pleasure-seeker; smooth boulevard roads, over which one can travel at the rate of ten miles an hour, or rough mountain drives through a wild and picturesque country, embracing deep ravines, bold rocky cliffs, crossing brooks of the purest spring water, loitering in the shade of grand old oaks, beeches and tulips, a noble old forest of native evergreen and deciduous trees. This is the first large sale of lotted property that has been held in the City of Orange, and both auctioneers and owner are making great exertions to make it perfectly satisfactory. Maps and particulars may be had at the auctioneers' office, No. 26 Pine-street, New-York.

The continuation sale made on Wednesday last, at Archville, near Tarrytown, N. Y., by Messrs. MALLORY & BLACKWELL, was a complete success. Every lot was sold and the prices were quite satisfactory. This firm are already doing quite a large business in property along the Hudson River, and from their promptness and evident desire to please, are rapidly gaining popularity.

A PACIFIC RAILWAY

GOLD LOAN

$6,500,000.

We beg leave to announce that we have Accepted the Agency of the KANSAS PACIFIC RAILWAY CO.

For the sale of its

New Seven Per Cent. Thirty-Year Gold Loan, Free of Tax.

This Loan amounts to $6,500,000,

First Mortgage Land-Grant and Sinking Fund Bonds,

secured upon the extension of the Railway from near Sheridan, in Kansas, to Denver, Colorado, a distance of 327 miles, of which twelve miles are completed, and the rest is under construction. It is also a mortgage upon the rolling stock and franchises of this first-class railway now running through the State of Kansas.

And is successful operation for 437 miles west of the Missouri River, and earning already enough to meet all of its expenses and existing obligations, besides

More than the Interest upon this new Loan.

In addition to this the bonds are also secured by a first mortgage of the Government Land Grant of three million acres, extending in alternate sections on either side of the track, from the 250th mile post in Kansas to Denver. The proceeds of the sale of these lands are to be invested by the Trustees in the 7 per cent. Bonds themselves up to 120, or in United States Bonds as

A Sinking Fund for the redemption of the Bonds.

The lands embrace some of the finest portions of the magnificent Territory of Colorado, including a coal field and pinery. The Company also holds as an asset another tract of

Three Millions of Acres in the State of Kansas, and although not pledged as a security for this loan, their possession adds largely to the Company's wealth and credit. We estimate the Value of the Company's Property, Covered by This Mortgage, at $23,000,000, Net, While the Loan is Merely $6,500,000.

The bonds have

THIRTY YEARS TO RUN,

from May 1, 1869, and will pay

SEVEN PER CENT. INTEREST IN GOLD, semi-annually, on May 1 and Nov. 1, and are

Free From Government Taxation,

the Company paying the tax.

The Principal of the loan is made Payable, in Gold, in the City of New-York, but each coupon will

Be Payable in Frankfort, London, or New-York, at the option of the holder, without notice, at the following rates:

On $1,000 Bond in New-York...$36 (gold) each half year.
On $1,000 Bond in London.....£7 5s. 10d. each half year.
On $1,000 Bond in Frankfort...7 florins and 90 kreutzers each half year.

The agents of the loan, before accepting the trust, and the condition of the road, and the country through which it runs, carefully examined. They are happy to give the loan as emphatic indorsement as a

FIRST-CLASS INVESTMENT

in every respect, perfectly sure, and in some essentials even Better than Government Securities.

The bonds will be sold for the present at 96, and accrued Interest, both in Currency, the agents reserving the right to advance the rate.

The attention of investors is invited to these well-secured bonds, which we recommend as one of the most profitable investments in the market.

OF ILLINOIS,

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD AT THE FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY, NEW-YORK. COUPONS PAYABLE APRIL AND OCTOBER.

FREE OF GOVERNMENT TAX.

The Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad, upon which property these bonds are issued is now in process of construction, the section being the Office of Danville and Pekin, both in Illinois. The length of the road is 120 miles, the central stock $3,000,000. The grading, building, and all the work necessary to perfect a complete Railway has been already done, and the whole line is ready for the rails. There are complete surveys and maps of the road. The road is now in operation. It is expected that the whole road will be completed early the ensuing Autumn.

These bonds are convertible into stock at par of the stock of the holder, and may be registered in the name of the owner in any City of Europe. The total amount of bonds is limited to $2,000,000. The security offered is, as we think, ample; one-very best. Already equal nearly equal to the total amount of the bonds is in hands have been expended on the road. The bonds, averaging less than $4,000 per mile, are secured by a first mortgage on the whole road and entire property of the Company. The road runs east and west through the heart of the great and rich agricultural region of the State, passing through several populous towns and cities, and the richest agricultural district in Illinois, in a word, through the garden of the Gar

CHINA AND JAPAN.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMER JAPAN.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company's steamer Japan, which left Hong Kong June 19 and Yokohama June 25, arrived in San Francisco July 28.

China—The Burlingame Embassy—Proceeds of a Rebellion—Anti-Foreign Sentiment—Shameful Traffic—Movements of American Vessels.

From the Shanghae News Letter of June 19 we summarize the following items of intelligence. A letter from Pekin of May 6 says:

"The great north and south gates of the inner or prohibited city, (in which is situated the Imperial residence) are undergoing extensive repairs.

"We have had several slight falls of rain during the latter part of May, but the showers have not been sufficiently copious to much improve the more almost desperate condition of crops. The weather is beaming hot, the thermometer having risen to 90 to 94°.

"It is rumored the government commissioner to the west, is busily engaged in the preparation of a memorial on the subject of the Chinese Embassy, which, if the statements mentioned to place the thing in a very favorable light, may be confidently looked for.

"Great excitement now exists here, at Soochow and among some of the cities on the banks of the Grand Canal, at the prospect of a rebellion of formidable proportions. We hear that a letter was found giving particulars of a conspiracy to take Soochow, Kashing, Euchow and Hangchow. It is their intention afterward to capture Shanghae. Three men were arrested at Wooseh (about fourteen miles south of Soochow), and on one of them was found an official seal with characters meaning "The Great Original General Governing the East." The men were put to the tortures, and after all they had to tell had been drawn from them, were beheaded. It is reported that the number of conspirators is about 50,000. They are chiefly Canton and Ningpo disbanded braves, or old Taipings. Many of the ringleaders have been caught in Shanghae, some in the city and some in the French Concession. Numbers of the Soochow people are flocking to this place, with all their property, for protection, as they have good reason to dread another rebellion."

A letter from Formosa says: "At Ganchai, a place about 300 miles north of Takow, the inhabitants shut their gates, and resisted the efforts of the new General-in-Chief to capture a few pirates. The General was accompanied by a force of Honan braves, but was defeated when trying to storm. Ekw Anping Governor, with another force, came to his aid, and a settlement was agreed upon, the place being nominally given up."

Mr. T. T. COOPER is making active preparations for the Indo-Chinese expedition. On the 8th of April he left Allahabad for Umballa and other cities to purchase mules, &c.

The American Episcopal Hospital, Hongkong, which was established by Rev. Mr. Thomson, through a donation from a Philadelphia lady, continues in successful operation, there being on attendance on prescribing day of from 400 to 500 patients. Dr. MACGOWAN's pupil, an educated Chinaman, has been in charge, Dr. MACGOWAN attending as consulting surgeon.

Reports were at hand concerning a mutiny in the Imperial camps stationed in the province of Kansuh. It appears that the soldiers, under the command of one General YOU-LIEN-SHUN, secretly formed among themselves a society known by the name of Ko-lao-hwui, or Society of Friends, the main object of which, as appeared from the result, was to attack and destroy the camp of their General. Two or three separate attempts made by the leadership of their officers, seemed to have been involved, and so far secured pushed their purpose as to destroy the General KOU-LIEN-SHUN; but on the news of the mutiny reaching TSO-TSUNG-TANG, the chief of the forces, an army was dispatched to arrest their proceedings. Information succeeded in capturing the ringleaders, who proved to be three red-buttoned mandarins, all of whom were immediately executed.

During the stay of Her Britannic Majesty's gunboat Opossum at I-chang, an anonymous placard was posted on the gates, wherein a society or guild held out offers of reward for the murder of foreigners, for the destruction of their steamers, &c. It is called a special announcement, and is dated the 15th day of third month of the eighth year of Tungchi, at the common hall of the Ko-lao-hwui (secret company.) Foreigners, it appears from this precious document, are worth, when killed, $40. Steamers, when burnt or otherwise destroyed, $100; and if any one, in killing a foreigner, receives mortal hurt, the guild provides a coffin and pays his funeral expenses, besides providing liberally for his family by presenting them with $500."

The Hong Kong Press of June 1 says: "Young girls kidnapped up the country form a large proportion among the women who are sent over to San Francisco to be consigned to a life of prostitution. Such a power of coercion is brought to bear upon them, that in a majority of cases they fear to take any steps to free themselves from their miserable lot; though many times while awaiting their departure in Hong Kong, they received to escape from a life of degradation and crime by a self-inflicted and early death. These luckless girls are entirely away from the country by the wiles of wretched hags, who contrive to smuggle them off. The favorite plan appears to be to get them away from the temples, to which, for the most part, they go protected only by one of the servants in the house to which they belong. This individual is bribed and the heartless capture effected. Arrived in Hong Kong, the unlucky girls discover, after a short time, how they have been entrapped; but they have not any idea of how to free themselves. They are intimidated from complaining to their neighbors, and do not know that they can obtain protection by complaining to the Police or to the Magistrates. Thus, after a short time, they are shipped off, and it seems that no one is able to prevent the perpetration, in a British colony, of one of the most awful crimes that it is possible to conceive. It is surely time that some steps were taken to investigate this matter to the bottom. So far as it is known, it appears that the emigrants on board the Pacific steamers always say that they leave of their own free will. But it is, beyond a doubt, that in many instances this is not the case. It is clear, therefore, that this statement can only be made under much coercion, and that there must be some kind of organized system at work among the Chinese, which assists the intimidation of the victims."

The United States steamer Resource, Lieutenant-Commander W. B. CUSHING, put into Shanghae June 8, on her way from Nagasaki to Foochow, in order to have some repairs made to her boiler. She left again on June 14, sea Hingpo. The Dandilla was at Hong Kong; Oneida at Hakodadi; Portsoigen, Bagshap, and Monocacy at Yokohama; Iroquois and Ashuelot at Nagasaki. The Aroostook was overdue at Nagasaki from Hakodadi, but the disturbances in that quarter had doubtless detained her. The Iroquois was under orders to proceed to Hakodadi. Commander LAW, of the Ashuelot, goes in command of the Iroquois, and Lieutenant-Commander MAHER takes the Ashuelot. It is reported that both the United States steamers Unadilla and Mosmee have been condemned, and after undergoing some necessary repairs for the homeward bound voyage, will be sent over to California and sold.

Japan—Continuance of the Coast War—Mais'mai and Tsuki Entered—Earthquake Shock at Yokohama—Attack on Hakodadi.

The news from Japan is of considerable interest. The coast war continues to rage with increasing violence. The latest advices from the north are to the effect that Hakodate had fallen, and that ENWALO and his desperate band were at Kamaoda, at bay, surrounded by the Imperial forces. Two Japanese war vessels, the Eagle and Emperor, were destroyed by the Southerners, who poured shot and shell into Hakodate, the guns of the fleet being well served throughout the action. An eye-witness of the fight says the troops on both sides marched up to the attack and took up their position under a heavy fire with great coolness.

The Southern troops had entered Mais'mai and Iwaki. The Japan Herald gives the following account of the affair:

"Mais'mai was captured on Friday, the 24th ult.; the routed troops of ENOMOTO falling back in great disorder on Hakodate. The bombardment commenced at 4 A. M. and lasted until 7 P. M., when the Mikado's flag was hoisted amid the ruins of the forts, and 2,000 additional troops were landed by the Osaka. The enemy left 100 killed on the ground, and seventy wounded prisoners."

On the afternoon of June 6 a sharp shock of an earthquake was felt at Yokohama. It was the most severe experienced in years, the vibrations being so great that chandeliers swung like pendulums and clock clocks were stopped. Little damage was done.

The people of Yokohama were amusing themselves with cricket and foot-racing, while a theatre was in full blast.

The steamer Queen Queen collided with the steamship New-York in Yokohama harbor, June 6, both sustaining some damage.

The Japan Gazette gives the following particulars of the attack on Hakodadi on the 9th of June: The Imperialists commenced operations against the place, and in the teeth of the most deadly fire from a strongly-posted foe, they advanced with the steadiness of European troops, and succeeded in reaching and taking a fort that was the advanced post of Mogowara men. They entered it 9 P. M., having fought every inch of the way, a distance of nine miles as the crow flies, from the post they left at 5 o'clock in the morning. The fort was commanded by Captain BRUNET and the Japanese Commander-in-Chief. The latter was killed. After the fort was taken Captain BRUNET did all he could to encourage the defenders; but they would not stand any longer, and made good their retreat to the next fortified station. Both sides suffered frightfully. An eye-witness describes it to be as a butchery; but it was carried on fighting, with all the appliances of science in the shape of big guns, Minie rifles, and the tactics pursued. The attacking party were materially aided by the fleet, which sent shells right into the midst of the enemy, and did more than anything else to demoralize them. Captain BRUNET must be now the determined adversary of the enemy, in spite of the bayes made in his ranks by the fire of the fleet. The manner in which the Japanese fought was a surprising one. A shell in the fort, which killed Japanese General, and that in an hour at once they would pass round the Kamida fort and the town of Hakodadi fell.

Return of Chinese to San Francisco.

From the San Francisco News, June 28.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company's steamship Japan arrived from China at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, bringing 1,300 Chinese. The steam sight passed by the Custom-house ch. the steamship passed over from Hong Kong with an open bill of lading for 1,000 Chinese, and the balance of their business for the return of their business for the return of their business. The vessel was moored to her wharf, and the work of unloading commenced. Our Chinese friends could not take the time to be disturbed by the noise of the gong, so they quietly slept on the wharf, while the work was being carried on. In one case a swinging sign for a wash-house, which was sold to all appearances, on being broken, revealed the fact that it was composed of two very dirty boards, the space between being packed with opium. More of the drug was found in other bottoms of earthen pots, in chests on the bottoms of boxes, in false covers, sides and bottoms of trunks and boxes, and, in fact, every nook or corner where the owner thought there was a chance of smuggling it through.

After the Custom-house officers had finished their search, the Celestials were loaded into express wagons and started for the Chinese quarters in the city. Chief CROWLEY, knowing the terrible outrages which have heretofore been heaped upon these inoffensive people, took the precaution to station a sufficient number of policemen along the route to protect them in case an assault should be made. Members of the Chinese Protection Society were also on hand, but their services were not required.

CONVENTION OF PHILOLOGISTS.

Proceedings Yesterday—The English Language—Phonetics—The Indian Languages.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Thursday, July 29.

This morning the American Philological Association were conveyed to Vassar College in carriages, where they inspected the various departments of that institution. This evening they visited Eastman's Park in a body, where the members were entertained with an open-air concert and collation. To-night Hon. Mr. TRUMBULL, of Hartford, Conn, and Rev. Mr. HULBURT, of Canada, read papers on the Indian language. The members are expediting the business of the Association, hoping to reach a final adjournment to-morrow noon.

After the Convention's most interesting visit to Vassar College this morning, it was called to order, when Professor CROSBY presented papers from Professors SCHLIEMANN, of Paris, and BURNHAM, of Wisconsin. Dr. CROSBY, by request, read Professor SCHLIEMANN's communication. Professor COMFORT announced a Committee on Professor LEURIO's scheme of the formation of language, to meet the author, consisting of Professors RAYMOND, BIRS and HARKNESS.

Professor SHELE DE VERE then, according to programme, read the most eloquent and searching paper which has yet been submitted on "The English Language." He said in teaching it we must not cram with forms. English is as useful as Latin or Greek. It must be studied first as a wonderful mechanism. It is no farrago of discordant material. It fulfills the great end of mechanical law triumphantly. The smallest means with which it accomplishes its great results are monosyllables. These SHAKESPEARE knew how to wield; out of one of Macbeth's speeches of fifty-two words fifty are monosyllables. Through the mechanical is transmitted to us its poetical power. The mind is kept active. There is no fullness of form, no minute detail, but there is a subtlety in shades of meaning. The mind, heart and ear must work together to catch all. This is the poetry of language. Teachers showing this will sharpen intellects. A hint supplies the place of the inflections of other languages. English is a living organism. There is no crystallization in it. MAX MULLER declares it to be a branch of natural science, and proves it so. It is a living language. It has its periods of infancy, of childhood, of manhood, even of decay, but inevitably with regeneration. It manifests new powers. But teachers must master etymology. English has many words of the same origin which have now not a letter in common. How it would please a child to know that daisy means day's eye. Behold in alms the old word eleemosynary expressing the virtue of the term. We show how living the language is, because we know it has changes through climate and local effects like man. There is the burr of Yorkshire, and the softer sounds of Lancashire. Look at the language of New-England. Above all, let teachers show what profit there is in a study of the individual life of the English language. It has its pedigree. There are few greater subjects than the changes of national language in the mind of the nation. Compare the Republican Latin with the florid diction of the Empires. Call the pupil's attention to the Bible's beautiful translation by WICKLIFFE, and the euphemism of later days. Much more the eloquent Professor said. His address will probably be published. He spoke further of the indebtedness in language to Latin and Greek and the old Anglo Saxon, as preserved in the Episcopal marriage service. Desultory discussion took place after Professor PERSONS' paper, on the same subject and mode of teaching, by Professors DAY and HALDEMAN, when the Convention merged into the American Philological Association.

After the new Association had been organized, Professor MUNSON, of New-York, in an able paper, advocated a system of phonetics.

The afternoon session was honored with the presence of Dr. MCCOSH, of Princeton, late of Belfast.

Professor MIXER, of Rochester, then read a paper on "The Position and Value of the Modern Languages in Our College System." He would not, he said, displace, but supplement classical study with them. This united system, with the reflected light of the one, should eliminate the term dead languages. He urged in instruction familiar talk, with abundant illustration. Classic studies, in proper instruction, he said, will never be lost sight of in a critical course of the modern languages.

Professor MAURY then took up a paper on "The Position of the Classics in Our System." This was a subject on which much had been already said.

He was followed by Professor COMFORT on the general necessity of the establishment of a post-graduate university, for the objects of which so many of our youth go to Europe. He urged the consideration of this by our greatest capitalists, and doubted not that the matter would force its way into notice. It would soon take away the rawness which is our reproach from the European side. He was loudly cheered.

Professor FERLING, and Rev. Mr. ARTHUR, of Troy, discussed the propriety of adding different linguistic studies contemporaneously.

President SAMSON followed on a thorough treatment of modern European languages. He enlarged Professor COMFORT's suggestions, and said it was his firm belief that the university system will eventually be adopted.

Professor CROSBY followed, saying our object was to have strong men of acute minds. He slightly differed from earth that had been said. He thought there was cause for American prejudices against old-country systems. Study of languages was not study of language. Running the student through so many grades of but one system was but to run him in a groove. He believed that our system would eventually be found to be the best system. Our thoughts are not what they supposed them to be. He believed in standing fast for Greek and Latin, but also in standing up for our own next.

Dr. DWIGHT said that had not Professor COMFORT initiated this movement, some one would, for the times demand it. He would turn giving talking into strong action. He believed a few earnest men could make the idea of the post-gradual university a fact. Only start the idea that it must be had, and it will find a response. He moved a Committee of three to report at the next meeting.

Professor COMFORT said he believed that students would yet come from Germany to learn in New-York City. It is hardly possible to inaugurate a special faculty of philology. Men of wealth, however, do not know our wants. They must be united by those who have the ear to direct their donations and further it. Let them look to those to whom they have the ear. The Association will be to consider again to-morrow.

A Massachusetts State Constable Assaulted by an Insane Man.

From the Boston Transcript, July 27.

At an entertainment given by a citizen of Duxbury last evening, AUGUSTUS O. ALLEN, of Boston, an uninvited guest, showed signs of insanity, which took various forms during the evening. At times he labored under the impression that he was threatened with typhoid fever, asked for a bath, and requested the visitors to feel of his pulse; then he feared a conspiracy between a myrmidon of the law and some one in a lumber yard. Finally he became violent, and the services of six Deputy State Constables were required to secure and convey him to Kingston. On the way he became still more violent, crying "I Murder!" and appealing to citizens on the route for a release from his captors.

At Kingston Mr. ALLEN was put into a car and in company with three officers started for Boston. On the way his insanity assumed various phases and increased in violence, and finally culminated in an attack with a pocket knife on Deputy MOORAN, who, with the other officers, forbeared to shoot; but we understand that the wound is not serious. From the first the officers showed much sympathy for the unfortunate man, who was in their charge three hours before a resort to force became absolutely necessary. When the city was reached Mr. ALLEN was taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital, but will probably be transferred to the Insane Asylum this afternoon. He has been staying in Duxbury for several days, and first gave evidence that he was not in his right mind while occupying rooms at Captain G. C. Francis's, where he was kindly cared.

BASE BALL.

Defeats Against Maryland—The Champions Win.

The Maryland Base-ball Club, of Baltimore, which is on a trip to meet the best nines of Philadelphia, New-York and other Northern places, arrived here yesterday morning. On Tuesday they met the Athletics, of Philadelphia, in a sharp game, which resulted in favor of the latter by a score of 29 to 27, and on Wednesday they commenced a match with the Keystones, but could not finish it on account of the rain.

They came to this City to try their skill with the Eckfords, Mutuals and Atlantics, and yesterday afternoon they played the first in the series of games with the champion Eckfords on the Union Grounds in Brooklyn. A large crowd of spectators was present, who watched the game with much interest. The Maryland Club drove up to the grounds at 3 o'clock, and appeared in a uniform of white pantaloons and check shirts and caps. In size and age there was little difference between them and their wiry competitors.

The game opened with the Eckfords at the bat. Contrary to expectation, they failed to make a single run in their first inning, owing to the fine play of the Marylanders. ALLISON, PATTERSON and MARTIN were put out in quick succession. The Marylanders then took the bat, but by an equal display of skill on the part of the Eckfords, they were sent back to the field also without a run. The second inning closed with the same result, ARMSTRONG, in the centre field, caught NELSON on the fly; JEWETT was put out on three strikes, and TRACY was caught by WORTHINGTON in the left field. HOOPER could get no further than second base. On the side of the Marylanders, BULLMAN couldn't stick to second base after reaching it safely; WORTHINGTON was put out on the first, and BUCK was caught on the fly.

The game at this stage promised to be close and exciting, and the champions looked serious. They broke the ice, however, in the third inning, and scored five runs, EGLER making the first one and coming in with applause. The Marylanders fared worse, LENNON, LUCAS and ARMSTRONG being caught out before a score could be made. In the fourth inning both nines made three runs. WORTHINGTON, of the Marylanders, sent the ball over the head of centre field and made the first home run, the spectators cheering him as he came in. The Eckfords next added four more to their score, and whitewashed the Marylanders, who, in the following inning, by some excellent playing, returned the compliment to their opponents, and HOOPER distinguished himself with another home run. The Eckfords by this time had fairly got the range of COPE's swift balls and batted with ease, running up their score finally to twenty-three, and ending the game in favor of the home club.

In the last innings the Marylanders played wildly, and closed up with but six runs on their scorer' book.

Notwithstanding the complete victory of the Eckfords, a very fine game was played by the Baltimore nine, and the interest was kept up to the last. Neither in batting nor in fielding were they the equals of the champions, and they acknowledged it with good grace. They said their treatment on the grounds could not have been fairer, and contrasted it with the uncivil manner in which the Philadelphia spectators greeted them at the matches there. The following is the summary of the game:
